What is it he aspires to ? Is it not this ? To shed the flow remains, His last poor ebb of blood in your defence.

Addison's Cato.

To EBB. v. n. [from the noun.] 1. To flow back towards the sea : opposed to flow.

Though my tide of blood Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now, Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea. Shaksp.

From thence the tide of fortune left their shore, And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. To decline ; to decay ; to waste.

Well, I am standing water : —I'll teach you how to flow.

—Do so : to ebb Hereditary sloth instructs me.

Shaksp. Tempest.

But oh, he ebbs ! the smiling waves decay ! For ever lovely stream, for ever stay ! Halifax.

EBEN. } n. f. [ebeni, Latin.] A hard, heavy, black, valuable wood, which admits a fine gloss.

EBONY. } If the wood be very hard, as ebony, or lignum vite, they are to turn : they use not the same tools they do for soft woods. Mexon's Mech. Exer.

Off by the winds extinct the signal lies, Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne.

Gay.

EBRIETY. n. f. [ebrietas, Latin.] Drunkenness ; intoxication by strong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EBRILLADE. n. f. [French.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse, by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIOSITY. n. f. [ebriositas, Latin.] Habitual drunkenness.

That religion which excuseth Noah in surprisal, will neither acquit ebriosity nor ebriety in their intended perversion.

Brown.

EBULLITION. n. f. [ebullio, Latin.] 1. The act of boiling up with heat.

2. Any intestine motion.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagree ; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder.

Bacon.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication ; as also a craffe and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkalizate and acid liquor ; any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties.

Quincy.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts ; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, 'till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal ?

Newton.

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition ; for if sal ammoniac, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue. Arbuton. on Aliments.

ECCENTRICAL. } adj. [eccentricus, Latin.]

ECCENTRICK. } 1. Deviating from the centre.

2. Not having the same centre with another circle : such circles were supported by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Astronomers, to solve the phænomena, framed to their conceit eccentricis and epicles, and a wonderful engine of orbs.

Bacon.

Thither his course he bends Through the calm firmament ; but up or down, By centrick, eccentric, hard to tell.

Milton.

They build, unbuild, contrive, To save appearances : they gird the sphere With centrick, and eccentric, scribbld o'er, Dycle, and epicycle, orb in orb.

Milton.

Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentric ?

Newton's Opticks.

3. Not terminating in the same point ; not directed by the same principle.

Whatever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends ; which must needs be often eccentric to the ends of his master.

Bacon's Essays.

4. Irregular ; anomalous ; deviating from stat-ed and constant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, seems eccentric and irregular.

King Charles.

A character of an eccentric virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties.

Dryden.

Then from whate'er we can to sense produce, Common and plain, or wond'rous and abstruse, From nature's constant or eccentric laws, The thoughtful soul this gen'ral inference draws, That an effect must presuppose a cause.

Prior.

ECCENTRICITY. n. f. [from eccentric.] 1. Deviation from a centre.

2. The state of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle where-in it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal.

Brown.

By reason of the sun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally.

Holder.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke, at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account favourites abroad, met no good news.

Walton.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the centre of the earth's elliptick orbit.

Harris.

ECCHYMOSIS. n. f. [εκχυμωσις.] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood.

Quincy.

Eccymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood in or under the skin, the skin remaining whole.

Wiseman.

Laxations are accompanied with tumour and ecchymosis.

Wiseman.

ECCLESIASTICAL. } adj. [ecclesiasticus, Lat.]

ECCLESIASTICK. } Relating to the church ; not civil.

Is discipline an ecclesiastical matter or civil ? If an ecclesiastical, it must belong to the duty of the minister.

Hooker.

Clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are liberal of those which they find in ecclesiastical writers.

Swift.

A church of Englandman has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastick government.

Swift.

ECCLESIASTICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A person dedicated to the ministries of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church.

Burnet's Theory.

ECCOPROCTICS. n. f. [ἐκ and πρὸς.] Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestines.

The

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are ecoprotick.

ECHINATE. } adj. [from echinus, Lat.] Bristled like an hedge-hog; set with prickles.

An echinated pyrites in shape approaches the echinated crystalline balls.

ECHINUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A hedgehog.
2. A shell fish set with prickles.
3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.
4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughness of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chestnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedge-hog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornices of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals, or eggs.

ECHO. n. f. [ἠχώ; echo, Lat.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph who pined into a found for love of Narcissus.

The pleasant myrtle may reach th' unfortunate Echo
In these woods to resound the renown'd name of a goddess.

2. The return or repercussion of any sound.
The found, filling great spaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes.

3. The sound returned.
Babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once.

Wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from their hollow earth.

O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bow'rs!

With other echo late I taught your shades
To answer, and resound far other song!

To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I sing;
The woods shall answer, and the echo ring.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The found must seem an echo to the sense.

1. To resound; to give the repercussion of a voice.

At the parting
All the church echo'd.
Through rocks and caves the name of Delia founds;

Delia each cave and echoing rock rebounds.

2. To be sounded back.
Hark how the found disturbs imperious Rome!
Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome!

Her miter'd princes hear the echoing noise,
And, Albion, dread thy wrath and awful voice.

To ECHO. v. a. To send back a voice; to return what has been uttered.

Our separatists do but echo the same note.

With peals of shouts the Tyrians praise the song;
Those peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng.

One great death deforms the dreary ground;
The echo'd woes from distant rocks resound.

ECLAIRISSEMENT. n. f. [French.] Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expostulation.

The eclaircissement ended in the discovery of the informer.

ECLAT. n. f. [French.] Splendour; show; lustre. Not English.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprise, and eclat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other.

ECLIPSE. n. f. [ἑκλιπσις.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the zodiac, and making an angle with the Equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23°. 30'. which is the sun's greatest declination.

This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. This line is drawn on the globe: but in the new astronomy the Ecliptick is that path among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from West to East. If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs.

All stars that have their distance from the Ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time,

ECLIPSE. adj. [ἑκλιπτικός.] Selecting; chusing at will.

Cicero was of the ecliptick sect, and chose out of each such positions as came nearest truth.

ECLIPSE. n. f. [ἑκλιπσις.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice stick.

ECLIPSE. n. f. [ἑκλιπσις.]

1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven; the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interposition of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Sips of yew,
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse.

Planets, planet-struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd.

So though the sun victorious be,
And from a dark eclipse set free,
The influence, which we fondly fear,
Afflicts our thoughts the following year.

An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, being between the sun and the moon, hinders the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one.

2. Darknes; obscuration.
All the posterity of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life.

Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our scatterings and eclipses.

To ECLIPSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.
Let the eclipsed moon her throne resign.

Now if the earth were flat, the dark'ned moon
Would seem to all eclips'd as well as one.

2. To extinguish; to put out.
Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.

3. To cloud; to obscure.
They had seen tokens of more than common greatness, howsoever now eclipsed with fortune.

Praise him to his father:—
—Let the prince's glory
Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his.

Let other muses write his prosp'rous fate,
Of conquer'd nationstell, and king's restor'd;
But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate,
Which like the sun's, more wonders does afford.

He descended from his Father, and eclipsed the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh.

4. To disgrace.
She told the king, that her husband was eclipsed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had shewed towards him.

Another now hath to himself engross'd
All pow'r, and us eclips'd.

ECLIPSE. n. f. [ἑκλιπσις.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the zodiac, and making an angle with the Equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23°. 30'. which is the sun's greatest declination.

This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. This line is drawn on the globe: but in the new astronomy the Ecliptick is that path among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from West to East. If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs.

All stars that have their distance from the Ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the Equator.

The terraqueous globe had the same site and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the Ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at present.

You must conceive an imaginary plane, which passing through the centre of the sun and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the Ecliptick, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation.

ECLIPSE. adj. Described by the ecliptic line.
The earth's rotation makes the night and day; The sun revolving through th' Ecliptick way, Effects the various seasons of the year.

ELOGUE. n. f. [ἑλῳγιον.] A pastoral poem, so called because Virgil called his pastorals eclogues.

What exclaiming praises Basilus gave this eclogue any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem great.

It is not sufficient that the sentences be brief, the whole eclogue should be so too.

ECONOMY. n. f. [ὀικονομία.] This word is often written, from its derivation, economy; but being no diphthong in English, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a household.
By St. Paul's economy the heir differs nothing from a servant, while he is in his minority; so a servant should differ nothing from a child in the substantial part.

2. Distribution of expence.
Particular sums are not laid out to the greatest advantage in his economy; but are sometimes suffered to run waste, while he is only careful of the main.

3. Frugality; discretion of expence; laudable parsimony.
I have no other notion of economy, than that it is the parent of liberty and ease.

4. Disposition of things; regulation.
All the divine and infinitely wise ways of economy that God could use towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that course of living which is most agreeable to our nature.

5. The disposition or arrangement of any work.
In the Greek poets, as in Plautus, we see the economy and disposition of poems better observed than in Terence.

6. System of matter; distribution of every thing active or passive to its proper place.
These the strainers aid,
That by a constant separation made,
They may a due economy maintain,
Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain.

ECONOMICK. } adj. [from economy.]

1. Pertaining to the regulation of an household.
Her quick'ning power in every living part,
Doth as a nurse, or as a mother serve;
And doth employ her economick art,
And busy care, her household to preserve.

In economical affairs, having proposed the government of a family, we consider the proper means to effect it.

2. Frugal.
Some are so plainly economical, as even to desire that the seat be well watered, and well swelled.

EOPHRACTICKS. n. f. [ἑοφρακτικαί.] Such medicines as render tough humours more thin, so as to promote their discharge.

Procure the blood a free course, ventilation, Vol. I. N^o 15. 3-2 and

and transpiration, by suitable purges and ecphrastic medicines. Harvey.

ECSTASY. n. f. [ἐκστασις.]

1. Any passion by which the thoughts are absorbed, and in which the mind is for a time lost.

Follow them swiftly,

And hinder them from what this ecstasy May now provoke them to. Shakespeare's Tempest.

"T may be

No longer joy there, but an ecstasy. Suckling. Whether what we call ecstasy be not dreaming with our eyes open, I leave to be examined. Locke.

2. Excessive joy; rapture.

O, love, be moderate! allay thy ecstasy. Shakespeare. The religious pleasure of a well-disposed mind moves gently, and therefore constantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecstasy; but is like the pleasure of health, still and sober. South.

Each delighted, and delighting, gives

The pleasing ecstasy which each receives. Prior.

A pleasure which no language can express;

An ecstasy that mothers only feel,

Plays round my heart. Philips's Discreet Mother.

3. Enthusiasm; excessive elevation and absorption of the mind.

He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me sing;

Which when I did, he on the tender grass

Would sit, and harken even to ecstasy. Milton.

4. Excessive grief or anxiety. This is not now used.

Sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air, Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems

A modern ecstasy. Shakespeare's Macbeth. Better be with the dead,

Than on the torture of the mind to lie

In restless ecstasy. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Madness; distraction. This sense is not now in use.

Now fee that noble and most sovereign reason, Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh,

That unmatch'd form, and feature of blown youth, Blasted with ecstasy. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

ECSTASIED. adj. [from ecstasy.] Ravished; filled with enthusiasm.

These are as common to the inanimate things as to the most ecstasied soul upon earth. Norris.

ECSTASTICAL. } adj. [ἐκστατικός.]

ECSTASTICK. } adj. [ἐκστατικός.]

1. Ravished; rapturous; elevated beyond the usual bounds of nature.

There doth my soul in holy vision sit, In pensive trance, and anguish, and ecstasick fit. Mil.

When one of them, after an ecstasick manner, fell down before an angel, he was severely rebuked, and bidden to worship God. Stillington.

In trance ecstasick may thy pangs be drown'd; Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

2. Raised to the highest degree of joy.

To gain Pescennius one employs his schemes; One grasps a Cecrops in ecstasick dreams. Pope.

3. Tending to external objects. This sense is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation.

I find in me a great deal of ecstasick love, which continually carries me out to good without myself. Norris.

ECTYPE. n. f. [ἐκτύπημα.] A copy.

The complex ideas of substances are ectypes, copies, but not perfect ones; not adequate. Locke.

ECURIE. n. f. [French; écurie, Latin.] A place covered for the lodging or housing of horses.

EDACIOUS. adj. [edax, Latin.] Eating; voracious; devouring; predatory; ravenous; rapacious; greedy.

EDACITY. n. f. [edacitas, Latin.] Voracity; ravenousness; greediness; rapacity.

The wolf is a beast of great edacity and digestion; it may be the parts of him comfort the bowels. Bacon.

To EDDER v. a. [probably from edge.] To bind or interweave a fence. Not in use.

To add strength to the hedge, edder it: which is, bind the top of the stakes with some small long poles on each side. Morimer's Husbandry.

EDG

EDDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Such fencewood as is commonly put upon the top of fences. Not in use.

In lopping and felling, save edder and stake, Thine hedges, as needeth, to mend or to make. Tusser.

EDDY. n. f. [edd, backward, again, and ea, water, Saxon.]

1. The water that by some repercussion, or opposite wind, runs contrary to the main stream.

My praies are as a bulrush upon a stream: if they sink not, 'tis because they are borne up by the strength of the current, which supports their lightness; but they are carried round again, and return on the eddy where they first began. Dryden.

2. Whirlpool; circular motion.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in, And smiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend, Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend, Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play; Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison's Cato.

EDDY, adj. Whirling; moving circularly.

And chaff with eddy winds is whirl'd around, And dancing leaves are lifted from the ground. Dryden's Virgil.

EDMATOSE. adj. [ἔδματος.] Swelling; full of humours: commonly written edematous.

A ferocity obstructing the glands may be watery, edematose, and scirrhus, according to the viscosity of the humour. Arbutnot.

EDGE. n. f. [ecge, Saxon.]

1. The thin or cutting part of a blade.

Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' th' sword His wife, his babes. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He that will a good edge win, Must forge thick, and grind thin. Proverbs.

The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife, No more shall cut his master. Shakespeare.

'Tis slander, Whose edge is sharper than the sword. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. A narrow part rising from a broader.

Some harrow their ground over, and then plow it upon an edge. Morimer's Husbandry.

3. Brink; margin; extremity.

The rays which pass very near to the edges of any body, are bent a little by the action of the body. Newton's Opticks.

We have, for many years, walked upon the edge of a precipice, while nothing but the slender thread of human life has held us from sinking into endless misery. Rogers.

Yes, the last pen for freedom let me draw, When truth stands trembling on the edge of law. Pope.

4. Sharpness of mind; proper disposition for action or operation; intenseness of desire.

Give him a further edge, And drive his purpose into these delights. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd, When want had set an edge upon their mind,

Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd, And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Greene's Manil.

Silence and solitude set an edge upon the genius, and cause a greater application. Dryden's Dafnedy.

5. Keeness; acrimony of temper.

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord! That would reduce these bloody days again. Shakespeare's Richard III.

6. To set teeth on EDGE. To cause a tingling uneasiness in the teeth.

A harsh grating tune setts the teeth on edge. Bacon.

TO EDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sharpen; to enable to cut.

There sat the rolling her alluring eyes, To edge her champion's sword, and urge my ruin. Dryden.

EDI

2. To furnish with an edge.

I fell'd along a man of bearded face, His limbs all cover'd with a shining case;

So wond'rous hard, and so secure of wound, It made my sword, though edg'd with flint, rebound. Dryden.

3. To border with any thing; to fringe.

Their long descending train, With rubies edg'd, and sapphires, swept the plain. Dryden.

I rid over hanging hills, whose tops were edg'd with groves, and whose feet were watered with winding rivers. Pope.

4. To exasperate; to embitter.

By such reasonings the simple were blinded, and the malicious edg'd. Hayward.

He was indigent and low in money, which perhaps might have a little edg'd his desperation. Watson's Life of D. of Bucks.

5. To put forward beyond a line.

Edging by degrees their chairs forwards, they were in a little time got up close to one another. Locke.

TO EDGE. v. n. [perhaps from edd, backward, Saxon.] To move forward against any power; going close upon a wind, as if upon its skirts or border, and so sailing slow.

I must edge upon a point of wind, And make flow way. Dryden's Cleonora.

EDGED. participial adj. [from edge.] Sharp; not blunt.

We find that subtle or edged quantities do prevail over blunt ones. Digby on Bodies.

EDGING. n. f. [from edge.]

1. What is added to any thing by way of ornament.

The garland which I wove for you to wear, And border'd with a rosy edging round. Dryden.

A woman branches out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat. Addison's Spectator.

2. A narrow lace.

EDGELESS. adj. [from edge.] Blunt; obtuse; unable to cut.

To-morrow in the battle think on me, And fall thy edgeless sword; despair and die. Shakespeare's Richard III.

They are edgeless weapons it hath to encounter. Decay of Piety.

EDGE-TOOL. n. f. [edge and tool.] A tool made sharp to cut.

I shall exercise upon steel, and its several forts; and what fort is fittest for edgetools, which for springs. Moxon.

EDGEWISE. adv. [edge and wise.] With the edge put into any particular direction.

Should the flat side be objected to the stream, it would be soon turned edgewise by the force of it. Ray.

EDIBLE. adj. [from edo, Latin.] Fit to be eaten; fit for food.

Some flesh is not edible, as horses and dogs. Bacon.

Wheat and barley, and the like, are made either edible or potable by man's art and industry. More against Atheism.

The edible creation decks the board. Prior.

EDICT. n. f. [edictum, Latin.] A proclamation or command or prohibition; a law promulgated.

When an absolute monarch commandeth his subjects that which seemeth good in his own discretion, hath not his edict the force of a law? Hooker.

The great King of kings, Hath in the table of his law commanded

That thou shalt do no murder; will you then Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's? Shakespeare's Richard III.

Severe decrees may keep our tongues in awe, But to our thoughts what edict can give law? Dryden.

The

The ministers are always preaching; and the governors putting out edicts, against gaming and fine cloaths. Addison.

EDIFICATION. n. f. [edificatio, Lat.]

1. The act of building up man in the faith; improvement in holiness.

Our blessed Saviour told us, that we must account for every idle word, not meaning that every word not designed to edification, or less prudent, shall be reckoned for a sin. Taylor.

2. Improvement; instruction.

Out of these magazines I shall supply the town with what may tend to their edification. Addison's Guardian.

EDIFICE. n. f. [edificium, Lat.] A fabrick; a building; a structure.

My love was like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

God built

So spacious, and his line stretch'd out so far, That man may know he dwells not in his own; An edifice too large for him to fill. Milton.

The edifice, where all were met to see him, Upon their heads and on his own he pull'd. Milton.

As Tuscan pillars owe their original to this country, the architects always give them a place in edifices raised in Tuscany. Addison on Italy.

He must be an idiot that cannot discern more strokes of workmanship in the structure of an animal than in the most elegant edifice. Bentley.

EDIFIER. n. f. [from edify.] One that improves or instructs another.

To EDIFY. v. a. [edifico, Lat.]

1. To build.

There was a holy chapel edify'd, Wherein the hermit wont to lay His holy things each morn and eventide. Spenser.
Men have edify'd

A lofty temple, and perfum'd an altar to thy name. Chapman.

2. To instruct; to improve.

He who speaketh no more than edificeth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Hooker.

Men are edified, when either their understanding is taught somewhat whereof, in such actions, it behoveth all men to consider, or when their hearts are moved with any affection suitable thereunto. Hooker.

Life is no life, without the blessing of a friendly and an edifying conversation. L'Estrange.

He gave, he taught; and edify'd the more, Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor. Dryden.

3. To teach; to persuade. This is now either obsolete or ludicrous.

You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue. Bacon's Holy War.

EDILE. n. f. [edilis, Latin.] The title of a magistrate in old Rome, whose office seems in some particulars to have resembled that of our justices of peace.

The edile, ho! let him be apprehended. Shakespeare.

EDITION. n. f. [editio, Latin.]

1. Publication of any thing, particularly of a book.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition upon the same ground. Burnet.

2. Republication; generally with some revival or correcting.

These are of the second edition. Shakespeare.

The business of our redemption is to rub over the defaced copy of the creation, to reprint God's image upon the foul, and to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition. South.

I cannot go so far as he who published the last edition of him. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

The Code, composed hastily, was forced to undergo an emendation, and to come forth in a second edition. Baker.

EDITOR. n. f. [editor, Latin.] Publisher; he that revises or prepares any work for publication.

When a different reading gives us a different sense, or a new elegance in an author, the editor does very well in taking notice of it. Addison's Spectator.

This nonsense got into all the editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope's Notes on Shakespeare.

To EDUCATE. v. a. [duco, Latin.] To breed; to bring up; to instruct youth.

Their young succession all their cares employ;
They breed, they brood, instruct and educate,
And make provision for the future state. Dryden's Virgil.

Education is worse, in proportion to the grandeur of the parents: if the whole world were under one monarch, the heir of that monarch would be the worst educated mortal since the creation. Swift on Modern Education.

EDUCATION. n. f. [from educate.] Formation of manners in youth; the manner of breeding youth; nurture.

Education and instruction are the means, the one by use, the other by precept, to make our natural faculty of reason both the better and the sooner to judge rightly between truth and error, good and evil. Hooker.

All nations have agreed in the necessity of a strict education, which consisted in the observance of moral duties. Swift.

To EDUCE. v. a. [educō, Latin.] To bring out; to extract; to produce from a state of occultation.

That the world was educ'd out of the power of space, and give that as a reason of its original: in this language, to grow rich, were to educ money out of the power of the pocket. Glennville.

This matter must have lain eternally confined to its beds of earth, were there not this agent to educ it thence. Woodward.

Th' eternal art *educ*es good from ill, Grafts on this passion our best principle. Pope.

EDUCATION. n. f. [from educ.] The act of bringing any thing into view.

To EDULCORATE. v. n. [from dulcor, Latin.] To sweeten. A chymical term.

EDULCORATION. n. f. [from edulcorate.] The act of sweetening.

To EEL. v. a. [ecan, ecan, ican, Saxon. eak, Scott. ek, Erse.]

1. To make bigger by the addition of another piece.

2. To supply any deficiency. See EKE.

Hence endless penance for our fault I pay;
But that redoubled crime, with vengeance new,
Thou biddest me to eke. Fairy Queen.

EEL. n. f. [ael, Saxon; aul, German.] A serpentine slimy fish, that lurks in mud.

Is the adder better than the eel,
Because his painted skin contents the eye? Shakespeare.

The Cockney put the eel 'th' paity alive. Shakespeare.

E'EN. adv. Contracted from even. See EVEN.

Says the satyr, if you have a trick of blowing hot and cold out of the same mouth, I have e'en done with ye. L'Estrange.

EFF. n. f. Commonly written EFT. A small lizard.

EFFABLE. adj. [effabilis, Latin.] Expressive; utterable. Dier.

To EFFACE. v. a. [effacer, French.]

1. To destroy any form painted, or carved.

2. To make no more legible or visible; to blot out; to strike out.

Characters on dust, the first breath of wind effaces. Locke.

It was ordered, that his name should be effaced out of all public registers. Addison on Italy.

Time, I said, may happily efface
That cruel image of the king's disgrace. Prior.

Otway fail'd to polish or refine,
And fluent Shakespeare scarce'd effac'd a line. Pope.

3. To destroy; to wear away.

Nor our admission thall your realm disgrace,
Nor length of time our gratitude efface. Dryden.

EFFE'CT. n. f. [effectus, Latin.]

1. That which is produced by an operating cause.

You may see by her example, in herself wise, and of others beloved, that neither folly is the cause of vehement love, nor reproach the effect. Sidney.

Effect is the substance produced, or simple idea introduced into any subject, by the exerting of power. Locke.

We see the pernicious effects of luxury in the ancient Romans, who immediately found themselves poor as soon as this vice got footing among them. Addison on Italy.

2. Consequence; event.

No man, in effect, doth accompany with others but he learneth, ere he is aware, some gesture, or voice, or fashion. Bacon's Natural History.

To say of a celebrated piece that there are faults in it, is, in effect, to say that the author of it is a man. Addison.

3. Purpose; intention; general intent.

They spake to her to that effect. 2 Chron.

4. Consequence intended; success; advantage. Christ is become of no effect unto you. Gal. v. 4.

He should depart only with a title, the effect whereof he should not be possessed of; before he deserved it. Clarendon.

The institution has hitherto proved without effect, and has neither extinguished crimes, nor lessened the numbers of criminals. Temple.

5. Completion; perfection.

Not so worthily to be brought to heroical effect by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Aeneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney.

Semblant art shall carve the fair effect,
And full achievement of thy great designs. Prior.

6. Reality; not mere appearance. In shew, a marvellous indifferently composed senate ecclesiastical was to govern, but in effect only one man should, as the spirit and foul of the residue, do all in all. Hooker.

State and wealth, the business and the crowd, Seems at this distance but a darker cloud;
And is to him, who rightly things esteems,
No other in effect than what it seems. Denham.

7. [In the plural.] Goods; moveables.

What form of prayer

Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder! That cannot be, since I am still possessor

Of those effects for which I did the murder,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen. Shakespeare.

The emperor knew that they could not convey away many of their effects. Addison's Spectator.

To EFFE'CT. v. a. [efficio, Latin.]

1. To bring to pass; to attempt with success; to achieve; to accomplish as an agent.

Being conful, I not doubt t' effect
All that you wish. Ben Jonson.

2. To produce as a cause.

The change made of that syrrip into a purple colour, was effected by the vinegar. Boyle on Colours.

EFFE'CTIBLE. adj. [from effect.] Performable; practicable; feasible.

That a pot full of ashes will still contain as much water as it would without them, is not effe'ctible upon the strictest experiment. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EFFE'CTIVE. adj. [from effect.]

1. Having the power to produce effects; efficacious; effectual: with of.

They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them. Bacon.

If any mystery, rite, or sacrament be effective of any spiritual blessings, then this much more, as having the prerogative and principality above every thing else. Taylor.

There is nothing in words and titles but suitability, that makes them acceptable and effective. Glennville.

2. Operative; active; having the quality of producing effects.

Nor do they speak properly who say that time consumeth all things; for time is not effective, nor are bodies destroyed it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

a. Producing effects; efficient.

Whoever is an effective real cause of doing his neighbour wrong is criminal, by what instrument soever he does it. Taylor.

4. Having the power of operation; useful: as, effective men in an army.

EFFE'CTIVELY. adv. [from effective.] Powerfully; with real operation.

This effectively resists the devil, and suffers us to receive no hurt from him.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

EFFE'CTLESS. adj. [from effect.] Without effect; impotent; useless; unmeaning.

I'll chop off my hands;

In bootless prayer have they been held up,

And they have ferv'd me to effectless use. Shakespeare.

EFFE'CTOR. n. f. [effector, Latin.]

1. He that produces any effect; performer.

2. Maker; Creator.

We commemorate the creation, and pay worship to that infinite Being who was the effector of it. Derham.

EFFE'CTUAL. adj. [effectual, French.]

1. Productive of effects; powerful to a degree adequate to the occasion; operative; efficacious.

The reading of Scripture is effectual, as well to lay even the first foundation, as to add degrees of farther perfection, in the fear of God. Hooker.

The communication of thy faith may become effectual, by the acknowledging of every good thing. Philom. 6.

2. Veracious; expressive of facts. A sense not in use.

Reprove my allegation, if you can;

Or else conclude my words effectual. Shakespeare.

EFFE'CTUALLY. adv. [from effectual.] In a manner productive of the consequence intended; efficaciously.

Sometimes the sight of the altar, and decent preparations for devotion, may compose and recover the wandering mind more effectually than a sermon. South.

A subject of that vast latitude, that the strength of one man will scarcely be sufficient effectually to carry it on. Woodward.

TO EFFE'CTUATE. v. a. [effectuare, French.] To bring to pass; to fulfil.

He found means to acquaint himself with a nobleman, to whom discovering what he was, he found a fit instrument to effectuate his desire. Sidney.

EFFE'MINACY. n. f. [from effeminate.]

1. Admission of the qualities of a woman; softness; unmanly delicacy; mean submission.

But foul effeminacy held me yok'd

Her bond slave: O indignity, O blot

To honour and religion! Milton's Agonistes.

2. Lasciviousness; loose pleasure.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy are prevented. Taylor.

EFFE'MINATE. adj. [effeminatus, Latin.]

1. Having the qualities of a woman; womanish; soft to an unmanly degree; voluptuous; tender; luxurious; of persons.

The king, by his voluptuous life and mean marriage, became effeminate, and less sensible of honour. Bacon.

2. Resembling the practice of a woman; womanish: of things.

After the slaughter of so many peers,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?

Shakespeare.

From man's effeminate slackness it begins,

Who should better hold his place. Milton.

The more effeminate and soft his life,

The more his fame to struggle to the field. Dryden.

3. Womanlike; soft without reproach. A sense not in use.

As well we know your tenderness of heart,

And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse. Shakespeare.

TO EFFE'MINATE. v. a. [effeminare, Latin.] To make womanish; to weaken; to emasculate; to unman.

When one is sure it will not corrupt or effeminate childrens minds, and make them fond of trifles, I think all things should be contrived to their satisfaction. Locke.

TO EFFE'MINATE. v. n. To grow womanish; to soften; to melt into weakness.

In a slothful peace both courage will effeminate and manners corrupt. Pope.

EFFE'MINATION. n. f. [from effeminate.] The state of one grown womanish; the state of one emasculated or unmanly.

Vices the hare figured; not only feneration, or usury, from its fecundity and superfetation, but degenerate effemination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO EFFE'RVESCE. v. n. [effervesco, Latin.] To generate heat by intestine motion.

The compound spirit of nitre, put to oil of cloves, will effervesce even to a flame. Mead.

EFFE'RVESCENCE. n. f. [from effervesco, Latin.] The act of growing hot; production of heat by intestine motion.

In the chymical sense, effervescence signifies an intestine motion, produced by mixing two bodies together that lay at rest before; attended sometimes with a hissing noise, frothing, and ebullition. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Take chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it: put it into strong spirit of nitre, 'till it becomes sweetish, and makes no effervescence upon the injection of the chalk. Grew.

Hot springs do not owe their heat to any colluctation or effervescence of the minerals in them, but to subterranean heat or fire.

Woodward's Natural History.

EFFE'TE. adj. [effatus, Latin.]

1. Barren; disabled from generation.

It is probable that females have in them the seeds of all the young they will afterwards bring forth, which, all spent and exhausted, the animal becomes barren and effete. Ray.

In most countries the earth would be so parched and effete by the drought, that it would afford but one harvest. Bentley.

2. Worn out with age.

All that can be allowed him now, is to refresh his decrepit, effete sensuality with the history of his former life. South.

EFFICA'CIOUS. adj. [efficax, Latin.] Productive of effects; powerful to produce the consequence intended.

A glowing drop with hollow'd steel

He takes, and, by one efficacious breath,

Dilates to cube or square. Philips.

EFFICA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from efficacious.] Effectually; in such a manner as to produce the consequence desired.

If we find that any other body strikes efficaciously enough upon it, we cannot doubt but it will move that way which the striking body impels it. Digby on Bodies.

EFFICACY. n. f. [from efficax, Latin.] Power to produce effects; production of the consequence intended.

Whatsoever is spoken concerning the efficacy or necessity of God's word, they tie and restrain only into sermons. Hooker.

Whether if they had tasted the tree of life before that of good and evil, they had suffered the curse of mortality; or whether the efficacy of the one had not overpowered the penalty of the other, we leave it unto God. Brown.

Efficacy is a power of speech which represents a thing, by presenting to our minds the lively ideas or forms. Peack. m.

The apostle tells us of the success and efficacy of the Gospel upon the minds of men; and, for this reason, he calls it the power of God, unto salvation. Tillotson.

The arguments drawn from the goodness of God, have a prevailing efficacy to induce men to repent. Rogers.

EFFI'CIENCE. } n. f. [from efficio, Lat.] The EFFICIENCY. } act of producing effects; agency.

The manner of this divine efficiency being far above us, we are no more able to conceive by our reason, than creatures unreasonable by their sense are able to apprehend after what manner we dispose and order the course of our affairs. Hooker.

That they are carried by the manuduction of a rule, is evident; but what that regulating efficiency should be, is not easily determined. Glanville.

Sinning against conscience has no special productive efficiency of this particular sort of sinning, more than of any other. South.

A pious will is the means to enlighten the understanding in the truth of Christianity, upon the account of a natural efficiency: a will so disposed, will engage the mind in a severe search. South.

Gravity does not proceed from the efficiency of any contingent and unstable agents; being entirely owing to the direct concurrence of the power of the Author of nature. Woodward.

EFFI'CIENT. n. f. [efficient, Latin.]

1. The cause which makes effects to be what they are.

God, which moveth meer natural agents as an efficient only, doth otherwise move intellectual creatures, and especially his holy angels. Hooker.

2. He that makes; the effector.

Observations of the order of nature carry the mind up to the admiration of the great efficient of the world. Hale.

EFFI'CIENT. adj. Causing effects; that makes the effect to be what it is.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient.

Collier on Thought.

TO EFFE'GIATE. v. a. [effigie, Latin.] To form in semblance; to image.

EFFI'GIATION. n. f. [from effigiate.] The act of imaging; or forming the resemblance of things or persons. Ditt.

EFFI'GIES. } n. f. [effigies, Latin; effigy is EFFI'GY. } from being in effigy] Resemblance; image in painting or sculpture; representation; idea.

We behold the species of eloquence in our minds, the effigies or actual image of which we seek in the organs of our hearing. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Preface.

Observe those numerous wrongs in effigy,
The gods have sav'd from the devouring sea. Garth.

EFFLORE'SCENCE. } n. f. [effloresco, Latin.]

EFFLORE'SCENCY. } n. f. [effloresco, Latin.]

1. Production of flowers.

Where there is less heat, three the spirit of the plant is digested, and severed from the grosser juice in efflorescence. Bacon.

3. Excrecencies in the form of flowers.

Two white sparry incrustations, with efflorescencies in form of shrubs, formed by the trickling of water. Woodward.

3. [In physick.] The breaking out of some humours in the skin, in distempers called exanthematous; as in the measles, and the like. Quincy.

A wart beginning in the cutis, and seemeth to be an efflorescence of the serum of the blood. Wijeman's Surgery.

EFFLORE'SCENT. adj. [effloresco, Lat.] Shooting in form of flowers.

Yellow efflorescent sparry incrustations on stone. Woodward.

EFFLU'ENCE. n. f. [effluo, Latin.] That which issues from some other principle.

Bright effluence of bright essence increate. Milton.

These scintillations are not the ascension of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the baches collided. Brown.

From the bright effluence of his deed
They borrow that reflected light,

With which the lasting lamp they feed,
Whose beams dispel the damps of envious night. Prior.

EFFLU'VIA. } n. f. [from effluo, Latin.]

EFFLU'VIUM. } Those small particles which are continually flying off from bodies; the subtilty which appears from their being able, a long time together, to produce very sensible effects, without any any sensible diminution of the body from which they arise.

If the earth were an electric body, and the air but the effluvia thereof, we might believe that from attraction, and by effluxion, bodies tended to the earth.

Neither the earth's diurnal revolution upon its axis, nor any magnetic effluvia of the earth, nor the air, or the atmosphere which environs the earth, can produce gravity.

If these effluvia, which do upward tend, Because less heavy than the air, ascend; Why do they ever from their height retreat, And why return to seek their central seat?

EFFLUX. n. f. [effluxus, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing out.

Through the copious efflux of matter through the orifice of a deep ulcer, he was reduced to a skeleton.

2. Effusion; flow.

The first efflux of mens piety, after receiving of the faith, was the felling and consecrating their possessions.

3. That which flows from something else; emanation.

Prime chearer, light!

Of all material beings, first and best!

Efflux divine!

4. The act of flowing is more properly effluence, and that which flows more properly efflux.

To EFFLU'X. v. n. [effluo, Latin.] To run out; to flow away. This is not often in use.

Five thousand and some odd centuries of years are effluxed since the creation.

EFFLU'XION. n. f. [effluxum, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing out.

By effluxion and attraction bodies tend towards the earth.

2. That which flows out; effluvia; emanation.

There are some light effluxions from spirit to spirit, when men are one with another; as from body to body.

To EFFOR'CE. v. a. [efforcer, French.]

1. To force; to break through by violence.

In all that room was nothing to be seen, But huge great iron chests and coffers strong, All barr'd with double bonds, that ne'er could ween

Them to efforce by violence or wrong.

2. To force; to ravish; to violate by force.

Then 'gan her beauty shine as brightest sky, And burst his beastly heart t' efforce her chastity.

3. To strain; to exert with effort or vehemence. This word is not now used.

The palmer lent his ear into the noise, To wheet who called so importunately;

Again he heard a more efforded voice, That had him come in haste.

To EFFOR'M. v. a. [efformo, Latin.] To make in any certain manner; to shape; to fashion.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing, and efforming us after thy own image.

EFFORMA'TION. n. f. [from efform.] The act of fashioning or giving form to.

Nature begins to set upon her work of efformation.

They pretend to solve phenomena, and to give an account of the production and efformation of the universe.

EFFORT. n. f. [effort, French.] Struggle; strain; vehement action; laborious endeavour.

If, after having gained victories; we had made the same efforts as if we had lost them, France could not have withstood us.

Though the same sun, with all diffusive rays, Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,

We prize the stronger effort of his pow'r, And always set the gem above the flow'r.

EFFUSION. n. f. [effusio, Latin.] The act of pouring out.

Endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, oftentimes disgrace, in most unsufferable manuscripts, the effusion of coins, and the procuring of mummies.

EFFRA'IBLE. adj. [effrayable, French.] Dreadful; frightful; terrible. A word not used.

Pestilential symptoms declare nothing a proportionate efficient of their effrayable nature but arsenical fumes.

EFFRONTERY. n. f. [effronterie, French.] Impudence; shamelessness; contempt of reproach.

They could hardly contain themselves within one unworthy act, who had effrontery enough to commit or countenance it.

Others with ignorance and insufficiency have self-admiration and effrontery to set up themselves.

A bold man's effrontery, in company with women, must be owing to his low opinion of them, and his high one of himself.

To EFFULGE. v. a. [effulgeo, Latin.] To send forth lustre or effulgence. I know not that this word is used.

The topaz charms the sight, Like these effulging yellow streams of light.

EFFULGENCE. n. f. [effulgeo, Latin.] Lustre; brightness; clarity; splendour.

On thee Impres'd, th' effulgence of his glory abides.

Thy lustre, blest effulgence, can dispel The clouds of error, and the gloom of hell.

EFFULGENT. adj. [effulgens, Latin.] Shining; bright; luminous.

How soon th' effulgent emanations fly Through the blue gulph of interposing sky!

The downworn fun Looks out effulgent, from amid' the flash Of broken clouds.

EFFUMAB'ILITY. n. f. [effumus, Latin.] The quality of flying away, or vapouring in fumes. An useful word, but not adopted.

They seem to define mercury by volatility, or, if I may coin such a word, effumability.

To EFFU'SE. v. a. [effusus, Latin.] To pour out; to spill; to shed.

He fell, and, deadly pale, Groan'd out his soul, with gushing blood effus'd.

At last emerging from his nostrils wide, And gushing mouth, effus'd the briny tide.

EFFU'SE. n. f. [from the verb.] Waste; effusion. Not used.

The air hath got into my deadly wounds, And much effuse of blood doth make me faint.

EFFU'SION. n. f. [from effusio, Latin.]

1. The act of pouring out.

My heart hath melted at a lady's tears, Being an ordinary inundation;

But this effusion of such manly drops, This show'r, blown up by tempest of the soul, Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd.

Our blessed Lord commanded the representation of his death, and sacrifice on the cross, should be made by breaking bread and effusion of wine.

If the flood-gates of heaven were any thing distinct from the forty days rain, their effusion, 'tis likely, was at this same time when the abyss was broken open.

2. Waste; the act of spoiling or shedding.

When there was but as yet one only family in the world, no means of instruction, human or divine, could prevent effusion of blood.

Stop effusion of our Christian blood, And 'stablish quietness

Yet shall she be restor'd, since public good For private int'rest ought not be withstood,

To save th' effusion of my people's blood.

3. The act of pouring out words.

Endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, oftentimes disgrace, in most unsufferable manner, the worthiest part of Christian duty towards God.

4. Bounteous donation.

Such great force the Gospel of Christ had then upon mens souls, melting them into that liberal effusion of all that they had.

5. The thing poured out.

Purge me with the blood of my Redeemer, and I shall be clean; wash me with that precious effusion, and I shall be whiter than snow.

EFFU'SIVE, adj. [from effuso.] Pouring out; dispersing.

The North-east spends its rage; th' effusive South

Warms the wide air.

EFT. n. f. [efeta, Saxon.] A newt; an evel; a small kind of lizard that lives generally in the water.

Peacocks are beneficial to the places where they are kept, by clearing of them from snakes, adders, and efts, upon which they will live.

The crocodile of Egypt is the lizard of Italy, and the eft in our country.

EFT, adv. [eft, Saxon.] Soon; quickly; speedily; shortly. Obsolete.

Eft through the thick they heard one rudely rush, With noise whereof he from his lofty steed

Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush, To hide his coward head from dying dread.

Quite consumed with flame,

The idol is of that eternal maid;

For so at least I have prefer'd the same, With hands profane, from being eft betray'd.

EFTSOONS. adv. [eft and soon.] Soon afterwards; in a short time; again. An obsolete word; formed, as it seems, by the conjunction of two words of the same meaning.

He in their stead eftsoons placed Englishmen, who possessed all their lands.

Eftsoons the nymphs, which now had flowers their fill,

Run all in haste to see that silver brood.

The Germans deadly hated the Turks, whereof it was thought that new wars would eftsoons ensue.

Eftsoons, O sweetheart kind, my love repay, And all the year shall then be holiday.

E. G. [exempli gratia.] For the sake of an instance or example.

E'GER. n. f. [See EAGER.] An impetuous or irregular flood or tide.

From the peculiar disposition of the earth at the bottom, wherein quick excitations are made, may arise those egers and flows in some estuaries and rivers; as is observable about Trent and Humber in England.

To EGER'ST. v. a. [egero, Latin.] To throw out food at the natural vents.

Divers creatures sleep all the Winter; as the bear, the hedge-hog, the bat, and the bee: these all wax fat when they sleep, and egest not.

EGE'STION. n. f. [egestus, Lat.] The act of throwing out the digested food at the natural vents.

The animal soul or spirits manage as well their spontaneous actions as the natural or involuntary exertions of digestion, egestion and circulation.

EGG. n. f. [æg, Saxon; oggh, Erse.]

1. That which is laid by feathered and some other animals, from which their young is produced.

An egg was found, having lain many years at the bottom of a moat, where the earth had somewhat overgrown it; and this egg was come to the hardness of a stone, and the colours of the white and yolk perfect.

Eggs are perhaps the highest, most nourishing, and exalted of all animal food, and most indigestible.

2. The spawn or germ of other creatures.

Therefore think him as the serpent's egg,

Which

E G R

Which hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischiefvous. Shakespeare.

Every insect of each different kind,
In its own egg, cheer'd by the solar rays, Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackmore.

3. Any thing fashioned in the shape of an egg.
There was taken a great glass-bubble with a long neck, such as chemists are wont to call a philosophical egg. Boyle.

To Egg. v. a. [eggia, to incite, Islandick:
eggian, Sax.] To incite; to instigate; to provoke to action: for this, edge is, I think, sometimes ignorantly used.

Study becomes pleasant to him who is pursuing genius, and whose ardour of inclination eggs him forward, and carrieth him through every obstacle.
Derham's Physico-Theology.

E'GLANTINE. n. f. [eglantier, French.] A species of rose, sweet-briar.
O'er-canopied with luscious wood-bine,
With sweet musk roses, and with eglantine.
Shakespeare.

The leaf of eglantine, not to slander, Outsweeten'd not thy breath. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Sycamores with eglantine were spread,
A hedge about the sides, a covering over head.
Dryden.

E'GOTISM. n. f. [from ego, Lat.] The fault committed in writing by the frequent repetition of the word ego, or I; too frequent mention of a man's self in writing or conversation.

The most violent egotism which I have met with,
in the course of my readings, is that of Cardinal
Wolsey's; ego & rex meus, I and my king.
Spektor.

E'GOTIST. n. f. [from ego.] One that is always repeating the word ego, I; a talker of himself.

A tribe of egotists, for whom I have always had a mortal aversion, are the authors of memoirs, who are never mentioned in any works but their own. Spektor.

To E'GOTIZE. v. n. [from ego.] To talk much of one's self.

EGREGIOUS. adj. [egregius, Lat.]

1. Eminent; remarkable; extraordinary.
He might be able to adorn this present age, and furnish history with the records of egregious exploits, both of art and valour. Moore against Albeim.

One to empire born;
Egregious prince! whose manly childhood shew'd
His mingled parents, and portended joy Unspeaking. Philips.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far vir-

2. Eminently bad; remarkably vicious. This is the usual sense.

We may be bold to conclude, that these last times, for infolence, pride, and egregious contempt of all good order, are the worst. Hooker, Preface.

Ah me, most credulous fool;
Egregious murderer! Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

And hence th' egregious wizzard shall foredoom
The fate of Louis and the fall of Rome. Pope.

EGREGIOUSLY. adv. [from egregius.] Eminently; shamefully.

Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me,

For making him egregiously an ass,
And practising upon his peace and quiet,
Even to madness. Shakespeare's Othello.

He discovered that, besides the extravagance of every article, he had been egregiously cheated.
Shakespeare's John Bull.

E'GRESS. n. f. [egressus, Lat.] The power or act of going out of any place; departure.

Gates of burning adamant,
Barr'd over us, prohibit all egress. Milton.

This water would have been locked up within the earth, and its egress utterly debarred, had the strata of stone and marble remained continuous.
Woodward's Natural History.

EGRESSION. n. f. [egressio, Lat.] The act of going out.

The vast number of troops is expressed in the swarms; their tumultuous manner of issuing out of their ships, and the perpetual egression, which seemed without end, are imaged in the bees pour-

E'CRET. n. f. A fowl of the heron kind, with red legs. Bailey.

E'CRIOU. n. f. [aigret, French; perhaps from aigre, four.] A species of cherry.

The cœur-cherry, which inclineth more to white, is sweeter than the red; but the ecriou is more four. Bacon.

To EJACULATE. v. a. [ejaculator, Latin.] To throw; to shoot; to dart out.

Being rooted so little way in the skin, nothing near so deeply as the quills of fowls, they are the more easily ejaculated. Grew's Muscum.

The mighty magnet from the centre darts
This strong, though subtle force, through all the parts:

Its active rays, ejaculated thence,
Irradiate all the wide circumference. Blackmore.

EJACULATION. n. f. [from ejaculate.]

1. The act of darting or throwing out.

There seemeth to be acknowledged, in the act of envy, an ejaculation or irradiation of the eye.
Bacon's Essays.

There is to be observed, in those dissolutions which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are; as the ebullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

2. A short prayer darted out occasionally, without solemn retirement.

In your dressing let there be ejaculations fitted to the several actions of dressing; as at washing your hands, pray God to cleanse your soul from sin.
Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

EJACULATORY. adj. [from ejaculate.]

1. Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences.

The continuance of this posture might incline to ease and drowsiness: they used it rather upon fume short ejaculatory prayers, than in their larger devotions. Duppa's Devotion.

2. Sudden; hasty.

We are not to value ourselves upon the merit of ejaculatory repentances, that take us by fits and

To EJECT. v. a. [ejicio, ejectum, Lat.]

1. To throw out; to cast forth; to void.

Infernal lightning fallies from his throat!
Ejected sparks upon the billows float! Sandys.

The heart, as laid, from its contracted cave,
On the left side ejects the bounding wave. Blackmore.

Tears may spoil the eyes, but not wash away the affliction; sighs may exhaust the man, but not eject the burthen. South.

2. To throw out or expel from an office or possession.

It was the force of conquest; force with force
Is well ejected, when the conquer'd can. Milton.

The French king was again ejected when our king submitted to the church. Dryden.

3. To expel; to drive away; to dismiss with hatred.

We are peremptory to dispatch
This viperous traitor; to eject him hence,
Were but our danger; and to keep him here,
Our certain death; therefore it is decreed
He dies to-night. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

4. To cast away; to reject.

To have ejected whatsoever the church doth make account of, be it never so harmless in itself, and of never so ancient continuance, without any other crime to charge it with, than only that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, could not have been defended. Hooker.

Will any man say, that if the words whoring and drinking were by parliament ejected out of the English tongue, we should all awake next morning chaste and temperate? Swift.

EJECTION. n. f. [ejectio, Lat.]

1. The act of casting out; expulsion.

These stories are founded on the ejection of the fallen angels from heaven. Broom.

E I T

2. [In physick.] The discharge of any thing by vomit, stool, or any other emunctory. Quincy.

EJECTMENT. n. f. [from eject.] A legal writ by which any inhabitant of a house, or tenant of an estate, is commanded to depart.

EIGH. interj. An expression of sudden delight.

EIGHT. adj. [eahta, Saxon; abta, Gothick; acht, Scottish.] Twice four. A word of number.

This island contains eight score and eight miles in circuit. Sandy's Journey.

EIGHTH. adj. [from eight.] Next in order to the seventh; the ordinal of eight.

Another yet?—a seventh! I'll see no more;
And yet the eightb appears. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

In the eightb month should be the reign of Saturn, Bacon.

I stay reluctant seven continu'd years,
And water her ambrosial couch with tears;
The eightb, the voluntarily moves to part,
Or urg'd by Jove, or her own changeful heart.

Pope.

EIGHTEEN. adj. [eight and ten.] Twice nine.

He can't take two from twenty for his heart,
And leave eighteen. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

If men naturally lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about eighteen; and yet eighteen years now are as long as eighteen years would be then. Taylor.

EIGHTEENTH. adj. [from eighteen.] The next in order to the seventeenth; twice ninth.

In the eighteenth year of Jeroboam reigned Abi-jam. 1 Kings.

EIGHTFOLD. adj. [eight and fold.] Eight times
the number or quantity.

EIGHTHLY. adv. [from eightb.] In the eighth place.

Eightbly, living creatures have voluntary motion, which plants have not. Bacon's Natural History.

EIGHTIETH. adj. [from eighty.] The next in order to the seventyninth; eighth tenth.

Some balances are so exact as to be sensibly turned with the eightieth part of a grain.

Wilkin's Math. Magic.

EIGHTSCORE. adj. [eight and score.] Eight times twenty; an hundred and sixty.

What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?

Eightscore eight hours? and lovers absent hours,
More tedious than the dial eightscore times?

Oh weary reckoning! Shakespeare.

EIGHTY. adj. [eight and ten.] Eight times ten;
four score.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.
Shakespeare.

Among all other climactericks three are most remarkable; that is seven times seven, or forty-nine; nine times nine, or eighty one; and seven times nine, or the year sixty three, which is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatu-lity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EIGNE. adj. [aïne, Fr.] [In law.] denotes the eldest or first born. Here it signifies unalienable, as being entailed.

It happeneth not seldom, that, to avoid the yearly oath, for averment of the continuance of some estate for life, which is eigne, and not subject to forfeiture for the alienation that cometh after it, the party will offer to sue a pardon uncom-pelled before the time; in all which, some mitigation of the uttermost value may well and worthily be offered. Bacon.

EI'SEL. n. f. [eoril, Saxon.] Vinegar, verjuice; any acid. An old word.

Cast in thy mind
How thou resemblest Christ, as with fowre poison,

If thou paine thy taste; remember therewithall
How Christ for thee tasted eisel and gall.

Sir T. More.

EI'THER. pron. [æðer, Saxon; auter, Scottish.]

1. Which soever of the two; whether one or the other.

E L A

Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him.
Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
So-like in arms these champions were,
As they had been a very pair;
So that a man would almost swear,
That either had been either.
Drayton's Nymph.
Goring made a fast friendship with Digby, either of them believing he could deceive the other.
Clarendon.
I do not ask whether bodies do so exist, that the motion of one body cannot really be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.
2. Each; both.
In the process of natural beings, there seem some to be creatures placed, as it were, in the confines of several provinces, and participating something of either. Hale.
Sev'n times the sun has either tropick view'd,
The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd.
Dryden's Virgil.
3. It is used sometimes of more than two; any one of a certain number.
4. Any of an indeterminate number, as in the following passage:
Henry VIII. Francis I. and Charles V. were so provident, as scarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either of the three, but that the other two would set the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.
EITHER. adv. [from the noun.] A distributive adverb, answered by or; either the one or.
We never heard of any ship that had been seen to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no nor of either the East or West Indies. Bacon's New Atlantis.
What perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd? Daniel.
Either your brethren have miserably deceived us,
or power confers virtue. Swift to Pope.
EJULATION. n. f. [ejulatio, Latin.] Outcry; lamentation; moan; wailing.
Instead of hymns and praises, he breaks out into ejulations and effeminate wailings.
Government of the Tongue.
With dismal groans
And ejulation, in the pangs of death,
Some call for aid. Philips.
EKE. adv. [eac, Saxon; ook, Dutch.] Also;
likewise; beside; moreover.
If any strength we have, it is to ill;
But all the good is God's, both power and eke will. Fairy Queen.
Now if 'tis chiefly in the heart
That courage does itself exert,
'Twill be prodigious hard to prove,
That this is eke the throne of love. Prior.
To EKE. v. a. [eacan, Saxon.]
1. To increase.
I dempt there much to have eked my store,
But such eking hath made my heart fore. Spenser.
The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.
— And mine to eke out her's.
Shakespeare's As you like it.
2. To supply; to fill up deficiencies.
Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind.
Shakespeare.
Your ornaments hung all,
On some patch'd doghole eek'd with ends of wall. Pope.
3. To protract; to lengthen.
I speak too long; but 'tis to piece the time,
To eke it, and to draw it out in length,
To stay you from election.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
4. To spin out by useless additions. [In this sense it seems borrowed from the use of our old poets, who put eke into their lines, when they wanted a syllable.]
To ELABORATE. v. a. [elaboro, Latin.]
1. To produce with labour.

E L A

They in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.
2. To heighten and improve by successive endeavours or operations.
The sap is diversified, and still more elaborated and exalted, as it circulates through the vessels of the plant. Arbutnot.
ELABORATE. adj. [elaboratus, Latin.] Finished with great diligence; performed with great labour.
Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than when politicians most agitate desperate designs. K. Charles.
At least, on her bestow'd
Too much of ornament, of outward shew Elaborate; of inward, less exact. Milton.
Man is thy theme, his virtue or his rage Drawn to the life in each elaborate page. Waller.
Consider the difference between elaborate discourses upon important occasions, delivered to parliaments, and a plain sermon intended for the lower people. Swift.
ELABORATELY. adv. [from elaborate.] Laboriously; diligently; with great study or labour.
Politick conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet prove abortive. South.
Some coloured powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground. Newton's Opticks.
I will venture once to incur the censure of some persons, for being elaborately trifling. Bentley.
It is there elaborately shewn, that patents are good. Swift.
ELABORATION. n. f. [from elaborate.] Improvement by successive operations.
To what purpose is there such an apparatus of vessels for the elaboration of the sperm and eggs;
such a tedious process of generation and nutrition.
Ray.
To ELANCE. v. a. [elancer, French.] To throw out; to dart; to cast as a dart.
While thy unerring hand elanc'd
Another, and another dart, the people Joyfully repeated Io! Prior.
Harsh words, that, once elanc'd, must ever fly Irrevocable. Prior.
To ELAPSE. v. n. [elapsus, Latin.] To pass away; to glide away; to run out without notice.
There is a docible season, a learning time in youth, which, suffered to elapse, and no foundation laid, seldom returns. Clarissa.
ELASTICAL. } adj. [from elastus.] Having the ELASTICK. } power of returning to the form from which it is distorted or withheld;
springy; having the power of a spring.
By what elastick engines did she rear
The starry roof, and roll the orbs in air. Blackmore.
If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to pressure, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastick, returning to its figure with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts.
Newton's Opticks.
The most common diversities of human constitutions arise from the solids, as to their different degrees of strength and tension: in some being too lax and weak, in others too elastick and strong.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
A fermentation must be excited in some assign-able place, which may expand itself by its elastick power, and break through, where it meets with the weakest resistance. Bentley.
ELASTICITY. n. f. [from elastick.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to restore themselves to the posture from whence they were displaced by any external force. Quincy.
A late string will bear a hundred weight without rupture; but, at the same time, cannot exert its elasticity: take away fifty, and immediately it raithers the weight. Arbutnot.
Me emptiness and dulness could inspire,
And were my elasticity and fire. Pope.
ELATE. adj. [elatus, Latin.] Flushed with success; elevated with prosperity; lofty; haughty.
Oh, thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate!
Too soon dejected, and too soon elate! Pope.

E L D

I, of mind elate, and scorning fear,
Thus with new taunts insult the monster's ear.
Pope's Odyssey.
To ELATE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To elevate with success; to puff up with prosperity.
2. To exult; to heighten. An unusual sense.
Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
Elates his being, and unfolds his power. Thomson.
ELATE'RIUM. n. f. [Latin.] An inspissated juice, light, of a friable texture and an acrid and pungent taste. It is procured from the fruit of the wild cucumber. It is a very violent and rough purge. Hill.
ELATION. n. f. [from elate.] Haughtiness proceeding from success; pride of prosperity.
God began to punish this vain elation of mind, by withdrawing his favours. Atterbury.
ELBOW. n. f. [elboga, Saxon.]
1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the shoulder.
In some fair evening, on your elbow laid,
You dream of triumphs in the rural shade. Pope.
2. Any flexure, or angle.
Fruit trees, or vines, set upon a wall between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.
3. To be at the ELBOW. To be near; to be at hand.
Strait will he come;
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home:
Quick, quick; fear nothing, I'll be at thy elbow.
Shakespeare's Othello.
ELBOWCHAIR. n. f. [elbow and chair.] A chair with arms to support the elbows.
Swans and elbowchairs, in the opera of Dioclesian, have danced upon the English stage with good success. Gay.
ELBOWROOM. n. f. [elbow and room.] Room to stretch out the elbows on each side; perfect freedom from confinement.
Now my foul hath elbowroom;
It would not out at windows nor at doors. Shakespeare.
The natives are not so many, but that there may be elbowroom enough for them, and for the adven-tives also. Bacon.
A politician must put himself into a state of liberty to provide elbowroom for conscience to have its full play in. South.
To ELBOW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To push with the elbow.
One elbows him, one jostles in the shole. Dryden's Juvenal.
2. To push; to drive to distance; to encroach upon.
It thrusts and stretches out,
And elbows all the kingdoms round about. Dryden.
If fortune takes not off this boy betimes, He'll make mad work, and elbow all his neighbours. Dryden.
To ELBOW. v. n. To jut out in angles. Dict.
ELD. n. f. [eald, Saxon; eld, Scottish.]
1. Old age; decrepitude.
Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld. Spenser.
Thy blazed youth
Becomes assuaged, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
He thought it touch'd his deity full near,
If likewise he some fair one wedded not,
Thereby to wipe away th' infamous blot
Of long uncoupled bed and childless eld. Milton.
2. Old people; persons worn out with years.
They count him of the green-hair'd eld. Chapman.
ELDER. adj. The comparative of eld, now corrupted to old. [eald, ealdon, Saxon.] Surpassing another in years; survivor; having the privileges of primogeniture: opposed to younger.
They bring the comparison of younger daughters conforming themselves in attire to their elder sisters. Heaue.
Let

ELD

Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so wears she to him,
So sways the level in her husband's heart.

Shakespeare.
How I firmly am resolv'd, you know;
That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakespeare.
Among the Lacedemonians, the chief magistrates, as they were, so were they called, elder men.

Raleigh's History.
The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the fame means the father did among them.

Temple.
Fame's high temple stands;
Stupendous pile! not rear'd by mortal hands!
Whate'er proud Rome, or artful Greece beheld,
Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd. Pope.

Elders. n. f. [from elder.]
1. Persons whose age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.

Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren. 1 Tim. v. 1.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chafe,
Shake off their sterile curse. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
The blushing youth their virtuous awe disclose,
And from their seats the reverend elders rose. Sandys.

2. Ancestors.
Says the goose, If it will be no better, e'en carry your head as your elders have done before you.

L'Estrange.
I lose my patience, and I own it too,
Where works are censur'd, not as bad, but new;
While, if our elders break all reason's laws,
Those fools demand not pardon, but applause.

Pope.
3. Those who are older than others.
Many nations are very superstitious and diligent observers of old customs, which they received by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles, in their songs, and by daily use and ensample of their elders.

Spenser's Ireland.
At the board, and in private, it very well becometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to say Amen.

Hooker.
4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.
5. [In the New Testament.] Ecclesiasticks.
6. [Among presbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in sessions, presbyteries, synods, and assemblies.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana; like the rude
Chaos of presbytery, where laymen ride
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.

Chauveland.
Elder. n. f. [ellara, Saxon; sambucus.] The name of a tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood: the flowers are monopetalous, divided into several segments, and expand in form of a rose: these are, for the most part, collected into an umbel, and are succeeded by soft succulent berries, having three seeds in each. It may be easily propagated from cuttings or seeds.

Miller.
Look for thy reward
Amongst the nettles at the elder tree,
Which overshades the mouth of that same pit.

Shakespeare.
Elderly. adj. [from elder.] No longer young; bordering upon old age.

I have a race of orderly elderly people of both sexes at command, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am giddy. Swift to Pope.

Eldership. n. f. [from elder.]
1. Seniority; primogeniture.
The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership.

Raleigh.
That all should Alibech adore, 'tis true;
But some respect is to my birthright due:
My claim to her by eldership I prove,

Dryden's Ind. Emp.
Nor were the eldership
Of Artaxerxes worth our least of fears,
If Memnon's interest did not prop his cause.

Rowe.

ELE

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session.

That controversy sprang up between Beza and Eraustus, about the matter of excommunications; whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be of necessity certain chosen out from amongst the laity.

Hooker, Preface.
Elders. adj. The superlative of eld, now changed to old. [ealb, ealbon, ealbyte, Saxon.]

1. The oldest; that has the right of primogeniture.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The mother's and her eldest daughter's grace,
It seems, had brib'd him to prolong their space.

Dryden.
2. The person that has lived most years.

Eldest parents signifies either the oldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue.

Locke.
Elecampa. n. f. [elecampane, Lat.] A plant, named also starwort. Botanists enumerate thirty species of this plant.

The Germans have a method of candying elecampane root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German spice. Hill's Materia Medica.
To ELECT. v. a. [electus, Lat.]

1. To choose for any office or use; to take in preference to others.

Henry his son is chosen king, though young;
And Lewis of France, elect first, beguill'd.

Daniel.
This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whose consent he was chosen, *elect*ed a hundred senators out of the commoners.

Swift.
2. [In theology.] To select as an object of eternal mercy.

ELECT. adj. [from the verb.]
1. Chosen; taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
And of your choice, these reverend fathers.
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembl'd
To plead your cause. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

2. Chosen to an office, not yet in possession.
The bishop elect takes the oaths of supremacy, canonical obedience, and against simony; and then the dean of the arches reads and subscribes the sentences.

Ayliffe's Parergon.
3. [In theology.] Chosen as an object of eternal mercy.

A vicious liver, believing that Christ died for none but the elect, shall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life.

Hammond.
Some I have chosen of peculiar grace, Elect above the rest: so is my will.

Milton.
ELECTION. n. f. [electio, Lat.]

1. The act of choosing; the act of selecting one or more from a greater number for any use or office; choice.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every several parish, do you think that they would chuse the meetest?

Whitgift.
Him, not thy election,
But natural necessity, begot.

Milton.
As charity is, nothing can more increase the lustre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application of it to them.

Spratt.
2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moving mind,
Which hath a judging wit, and chusing will!
Now if God's pow'r should her election bind,
Her motions then would cease, and stand all still.

Davies.
3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the sinners to turn themselves and live; he tells us, that he has set before us life and death, and referred it to our own election which we will chuse.

Rogers.
4. Discernment; distinction; discrimination.

The discovering of these colours cannot be done but out of a very universal knowledge of things: which so cleareth mens judgment and election, as it is the less apt to slide into error.

Bacon.

ELE

In favour, to use men with much difference and election is good: for it maketh those preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious. Bacon.

5. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The conceit about absolute election to eternal life, some enthusiasts entertaining, have been made remiss in the practice of virtue.

Atterbury.
6. The ceremony of a publick choice.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places.

King Charles.
Since the late dissolution of the club, many persons put up for the next election.

Addison's Spectator.
ELECTIVE. adj. [from elect.]

1. Regulated or bestowed by election or choice. I will say positively and resolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be so free and absolute as an hereditary.

Bacon.
The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem hitherto of less force, and unfitter for action abroad.

Temple.
2. Exerting the power of choice.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will.

Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.
ELECTIVELY. adv. [from elect.] By choice; with preference of one to another.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into those muscled electively, I am not subtle enough to discern.

Ray on the Creation.
They work not electively, or upon proposing to themselves an end of their operations.

Grew.
ELECTOR. n. f. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her silver and her gold
Came, like a tempest, to confound the old;
Feeding with these the brib'd electors hopes,
Alone she gave us emperors and popes. Waller.

2. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperor.

ELECTORAL. adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

ELECTORATE. n. f. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law; and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire.

Addison's Freeholder.
ELECTRE. n. f. [electrum, Lat.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that so attract the epithet electric.

2. A mixed metal.

Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electre, and turn the rest into coin.

Bacon.
ELECTRICAL. adj. [from electrum. See ELECTRICK.] ELECTRE.

1. Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electric bodies do I conceive not such only as take up light bodies, in which number the ancients only placed jett and amber; but such as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
An electric body can by friction emit an exhalation so subtle, and yet so potent, as by its emission to cause no sensible diminution of the weight of the electric body, and to be expanded through a sphere, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold, at the distance of above a foot from the electric body.

Newton.
2. Produced by an electric body.

If that attraction were not rather electric than magnetical, it was wonderful what Helmont delivereth concerning a glass, wherein the magistry

of loadstone was prepared, which retained an attractive quality.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electric vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light.

ELECTRICITY. n. f. [from electric. See ELECTRE.] A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw bits of paper, or such like substances, to them.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, first excited by the experiments of Gray, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a sphere of glass, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instantaneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosophers are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

ELECTUARY. n. f. [electarium, Caelius Aurel. which is now written electuary.] A form of medicine made of conserves and powders, in the consistence of honey. Electuaries made up with honey or syrup, when the consistence is too thin, ferment; and when too thick, candy. By both which the ingredients will be altered or impaired.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient, except fugar, common to any two of them.

ELEEMOSYNARY. adj. [eleemosyna.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity. Not used.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an elemosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posterior to and dependent on itself.

2. Given in charity. This is the present use.

ELEGANCE. n. f. [elegantia, Lat.]

1. A beauty rather soothing than striking; beauty without grandeur; the beauty of propriety not of greatness.

St. Augustine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference.

These questions have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world.

2. Any thing that pleases by its nicety. In this sense it has a plural.

My compositions in gardening are altogether Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art.

ELEGANT. adj. [elegans, Lat.]

1. Pleading by minuter beauties.

Trifles themselves are elegant in him.

There mayst thou find some elegant retreat.

2. Nice; not coarse; not gross.

Polite with candour, elegant with ease.

ELEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]

1. In such a manner as to please.

Now read with them those organic arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly.

In a poem elegantly writ,

I will not quarrel with a slight mistake.

2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty; with pleasing propriety.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententious.

Whoever would write elegantly, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period: there must be proper distances and pauses.

ELEGY. n. f. [elegiacus, Lat.]

1. Used in elegies.

2. Pertaining to elegies.

3. Mournful; sorrowful.

Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes.

ELEGY. n. f. [elegus, Lat.]

1. A mournful song.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind.

2. A funeral song.

So on meanders banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegy.

3. A short poem without points or affected elegancies.

ELEMENT. n. f. [elementum, Lat.]

1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.

If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should lose the qualities which now they have.

A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles.

Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies, usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded.

2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed. When it is used alone, element commonly means the air.

The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the element shews to him as it doth to me.

My dearest sister, fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
The king,

Contending with the fretful elements,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters.

The heavens and the earth will pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat.

Here be four of you were able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements.

He from his flaming ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element.

3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing: as water of fish.

We are simple men; we do not know the works by charms, by spells, and such daubry as is beyond our element.

Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements.

They shew that they are out of their element, and that logic is none of their talent.

4. An ingredient; a constituent part.

Who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?

—One fate that promises no element
In such a business.

5. The letters of any language.

6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.

With religion it fareth as with other sciences; the first delivereth of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners.

Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters.

We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world.

There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master.

To ELEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one such body be met with, in those said to be elemental bodies, I now question.

2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.

Dull sublimary lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit Of absence, 'cause it doth remove

The thing which elemented it.

ELEMENTAL. adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by some of the four elements.

If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And streak'd with red, a trouble'd colour shew;

That sullen mixture shall at once declare Winds, rain, and storms, and elemental war.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs, their elemental tea.

2. Arising from principles.

Leeches are by some accounted poison, not properly, that is by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fasten upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood.

ELEMENTARITY. n. f. [from elementary.] Containing the rudiments or first principles; simplicity of nature; absence of composition; Being uncompounded.

A very large class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity.

ELEMENTARY. adj. [from element.]

1. Uncompounded; having only one principle or constituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water.

The elementary salts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation.

2. Initial; rude.

ELEMI. n. f.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin.

The genuine elemi is brought from Ethiopia in flattish masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind.

The spurious or American elemi, almost the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with the greater or less tinge of a greenish or yellowish.

It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brazilians wound, and collect the resin.

ELENCHUS. n. f. [elenchus, Lat.] An argument; a sophism.

The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole temptation might be the same elenchus continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death.

Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, that old sophister, who puts the most abusive elenches on us.

ELEOTS. n. f. Some name the apples in request in the cyder countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England.

ELEPHANT. n. f. [elephas, Latin.]

1. The largest of all quadrupeds, of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given.

This animal feeds on hay, herbs, and all sorts of pulse; and it is said to be extremely long lived.

He is supplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands. His teeth are the ivory.

He loves to hear,

That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes.

The elephant hath joints, but not for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.

High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Cæsar's Indian war behold.

ELEPHANTIASIS. n. f. [elephantiasis, Latin.] A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.

ELEPHANTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Latin.] Pertaining to the elephant.

ELF

To ELEVATE. v. a. [elevo, Latin.]

1. To raise up aloft.
This subterranean heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyfs. Woodward.
2. To exalt; to dignify.
3. To raise with great conceptions.
Others apart sat on a hill retired,
In thoughts more elevated, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Milton.

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in those remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with, it stirs not beyond sense or reflection. Locke.

Now rising fortune elevates his mind,
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind. Savage.

4. To elate with vicious pride.

To mischief swift, hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton.

5. To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgments of learned men are alleged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgments of others as learned? Hooker.

ELEVATE. part. adj. [from elevated.] Exalted; raised aloft.

On each side an imperial city stood,
With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills. Milton.

ELEVATION. n. f. [elevatio, Latin.]

1. The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul and mind. Norris.

4. Exaltation of style.

His style was an elegant perspicuity, rich of phrase, but seldom any bold metaphors; and so far from tumid, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Wotton.

5. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hooker.

6. The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ELEVATOR. n. f. [from elevate.] A raiser or lifter up, applied to some surgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

ELEVEN. adj. [æntlepen, Saxon.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, and none less dear than Marcus, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakespeare.

ELVENTH. adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Raleigh's History.

ELF. n. f. plural elves. [elf, Welsh. Baxter's Gloss.]

1. A wandering spirit, supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places; a fairy.

Through this house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowy fire;
Every elf, and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from briar. Shakespeare.

Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton.

ELI

The king of elves and little fairy queen

Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,
Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;
Of airy elves by moon-light shadow seen,
The silver token, and the circled green. Pope.

2. A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elves;
And are but faires to set up ourselves. Dryden.

However it was civil, an angel or elf;
For he ne'er could have fill'd it so well of himself. Swift.

To ELF. v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair so matted together, hath had the name of elf-locks. Hammer.

My face I'll grime with filth, Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakespeare.

ELFIN. adj. [from elf.] Relating to fairies; elfish; belonging to elves.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that elfin knight he bade him fly,
Where he slept foundly. Spenser.

ELFLOCK. n. f. [elf and lock.] Knots of hair twisted by elves.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cakes the elflocks in foul fluttish hairs,
Which, once untangl'd, much misfortune bodes. Shakespeare.

To ELICITE. v. a. [elicio, Latin.] To strike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He elicits those acts out of the meer lapsed state of human nature. Cheyne.

ELICIT. adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act; brought from possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the formal elicit act of meekness: meekness being ordinarily annexed to these virtues. Hammond.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. South.

ELICITATION. n. f. [from elicio, Latin.]

That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Bramhall.

To ELIDE. v. a. [elido, Lat.] To break in pieces; to crush.

We are cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is elided. Hooker.

ELICIBILITY. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to chuse them in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness. Fiddes's Sermons.

ELIGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Latin.] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme is wisest, they can persuade him, that next to his own plan, that of the government is the most eligible. Addison's Freeholder.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the least abatement of those conditions? Swift.

That the most plain, short, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in form or all of these qualities. Swift.

Certainty, in a deep distress, is more eligible than suspense. Clarissa.

ELIGIBLENESS. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen; preferableness.

ELIMINATION. n. f. [elimino, Latin.] The act of banishing; the act of turning out of doors; rejection. Dict.

ELL

ELISION. n. f. [eliso, Lat.]

1. The act of cutting off; as, can't th' attempt, there is an elision of a syllable.

You will observe the abbreviations and elisions, by which consonants of most obdurate sounds are joined together without any softening vowel to intervene. Swift.

2. Division; separation of parts.

The cause given of sound, that it would be an elision of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon's Natural History.

ELIXATION. n. f. [elixus, Latin.] The act of boiling or stewing any thing.

Even to ourselves, and more perfect animals, water performs no substantial nutrition; serving for refrigeration, dilution of solid aliments, and its elization in the stomach. Brown.

ELIXIR. n. f. [Arabic.]

1. A medicine made by strong infusion, where the ingredients are almost dissolved in the menstruum, and give it a thicker consistence than a tincture. Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,
When cordials and elixirs fail'd,
On your pale cheek he dropped the show'r,
Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymists hope to transmute metals to gold.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall
Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

3. The extract or quintessence of any thing.

In the soul, when the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity infinitely beyond the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delight. South.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating substance.

What wonder then, if fields and regions here Breathe forth elixir pure. Milton's Paradise Lost.

ELK. n. f. [elc, Saxon.]

The elk is a large and stately animal of the stag kind. The neck is short and slender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in Winter is greyish; in Summer it is paler. The horns of the male elk are short and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with several prominences in its edges. Hill.

And, scarce his head
Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk
Lies slumb'ring silent in the white abyfs. Thomson.

ELL. n. f. [eln, Saxon.]

1. A measure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are said to make yearly forty thousand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ells to the piece. Addison.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long measure.

Acquit thee bravely, play the man;
Look not on pleasures as they come, but go:
Defer not the last virtue; life's poor span Makes not an ell by trifling in thy woe. Herbert.

ELLIPSIS. n. f. [ἑλλειψις.]

1. A figure of rhetoric, by which something is left out necessary to be supplied by the hearer: as, the thing I love, for the thing which I love.

The words are delivered by way of ellipsis, Rom. iv. 18. Hammond.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and meeting with the base when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, describe an ellipsis parallel to the horizon. Wilkins's Deedalus.

The planets could not possibly acquire such revolutions in circular orbs, or in ellipses very little eccentric. Bentley.

ELLIPTICAL. } adj. [from ellipsis.] Having

ELLIPTICK. } the form of an ellipsis; oval.

Since

Since the planets move in elliptick orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we must find out a law for the paracentric motion, that may make the orbits elliptick.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greatest diameter going transversely from side to side.

Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

ELM. n. f. [ulmus, Latin; elm, Saxon.]

1. The name of a tree. The species are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by some called the British elm; the smooth-leaved or witch elm. Neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themselves by seeds and suckers in such plenty as hardly to be rooted out; especially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots. They are very proper to place in hedgerows upon the borders of fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or close plantation, and their shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they should not be planted too near fruit trees; because the roots of the elm will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nourishment.

Miller.

The rural seat,

Whose lofty elms and venerable oaks,
Invite the rook, who high amid' the boughs,
In early Spring, his airy city builds.

Thomson.

2. It was used to support vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my husband; I a vine,
Whose weakness married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate.

Shakespeare.

ELOCUTION. n. f. [elocutio, Lat.]

1. The power of fluent speech.

A travelled doctor of physick, of bold, and of able elocution.

Wotton.

2. Power of speaking; speech.

Whose taste, too long forbore, at first essay Gave elocution to the mute, and taught
The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise.

Milton.

3. The power of expression or diction; eloquence; beauty of words.

The third happiness of his poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought so found, and varied, in apt, significant, and sounding words.

Dryden.

As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, so much more to express those thoughts with elocution.

Dryd. n.

E'LOGY. n. f. [elogie, French.] Praise; panegyric.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vanish into praises and elogies.

Wotton.

If I durst say all I know of the elogies received concerning him, I should offend the modesty of our author.

Boyle.

Some excellent persons, above my approbation or elogy, have considered this subject.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

To ELO'IGNE. v. a. [eloigner, French.] To put at a distance; to remove one far from another. Now disused.

From worldly care himself he did eloin,
And greatly shunned manly exercise.

Fairy Queen.

I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou shalt do
To anger destiny, as she doth us;
How I shall stay though she eligne me thus,
And how posterity shall know it too.

Donne.

To ELONGATE. v. a. [from longus, Lat.]

1. To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to stretch

2. To put further off.

The first star of Aries, in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection, which is now elongated and moved eastward twenty-eight degrees.

Brown.

To ELONGATE. v. n. To go off to a distance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Brasilia, the South point of the compass varieth twelve degrees unto the West; but elongating from the coast of Brasilia, towards the shore of Africa, it varieth eastward.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ELONGATION. n. f. [from elongate.]

1. The act of stretching or lengthening itself.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are separated by a wound.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. The state of being stretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is so extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place.

Quincy.

Elongations are the effect of an humour soaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be stretched, and to be thrust quite out upon every little force.

Wishman's Surgery.

4. Distance; space at which one thing is distant from another.

The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real.

Glauville's Sceptis.

5. Departure; removal.

Nor then had it been placed in a middle point, but that of descent, or elongation.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To ELOPE. v. a. [loopen, to run, Dutch.] To run away; to break loose; to escape from law or restraint.

It is necessary to treat women as members of the body politick, since great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance.

Addison's Freeholder.

What from the dame can Paris hope?

She may as well from him elope.

Prior.

The fool whose wife elopes some thrice a quarter, for matrimonial solace dies a martyr.

Pope.

ELOPEMENT. n. f. [from elope.] Departure from just restraint; rejection of lawful power: commonly used of a wife.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her husband to live with an adulterer, and with whom she lives in breach of the matrimonial vow.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

The negligent husband, trusting to the efficacy of his principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him.

Arbutnot.

ELOPS. n. f. [idol.] A fish; reckoned however by Milton among the serpents.

Scorpion and asp, and amphibia dire,

Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,

And dipfis.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

ELOQUENCE. n. f. [eloquentia, Latin.]

1. The power of speaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant more learned than the ears.

Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Athens or free Rome, where eloquence Flourish'd, since mute.

Milton.

His infant softness pleads a milder doom,
And speaks with all the eloquence of tears.

Haigh.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word;

Then I'll commend her volubility,

And say she uttered piercing eloquence.

Shakspeare.

Fit words attended on his weighty sense,
And mild persuasion flow'd in eloquence.

Pope.

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Latin.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant speech.

The Lord of hosts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator.

Isaiah, iii. 3.

O death! all eloquent, you only prove
What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love.

Pope.

ELSE. pronoun. [eller, Saxon.] Other; one beside: it is applied both to persons and things.

To stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him.

Should he or any else search, he will find evidence of the Divine Wisdom.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He says, 'twas then with him, as now with you;

He did it when he had nothing else to do.

Donham.

ELSE. adv.

1. Otherwise.

Dare not, on thy life,

Touch ought of mine beside, by lot my due,
But stand aloof, and think profane to view:
This faultion, else, not hitherto withstood,
These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood.

Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we should be assured, but either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause?

Tillotson.

2. Beside; except that mentioned.

Pleasures which no where else were to be found, And all Elysium in a spot of ground.

Dryden.

3. It has sometimes or before it superfluously.

Be more abstemious,

Or else, good night your vow.

Shakspeare.

ELSEWHERE. adv. [else and where.]

1. In any other place.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elsewhere.

As he proved that Pison was not Ganges, or Gehon, Nilus; so where to find them elsewhere he knew not.

Raleigh's History.

For, if we chance to fix our thoughts elsewhere, Though our eyes open be, we cannot see

Davies.

Henceforth oracles are cease'd,

And thou no more with pomp and sacrifice

Shalt be enquir'd at Delphos, or elsewhere.

Although seasoned bodies may and do live near as long in London as elsewhere, yet new-comers and children do not.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

2. In other places; in some other place.

They which elsewhere complain, that injury is offered to the meanest minister, when the magistrate appointeth him what to wear, think the gravest prelates no competent judges where it is fit for the minister to stand.

Hooker.

Let us no more contend, nor blame

Each other, blam'd enough elsewhere.

Bestow, base man, thy idle threats elsewhere;

My mother's daughter knows not how to fear.

Dryden.

If it contradict what he says elsewhere, it is no new or strange thing.

Tillotson.

To ELUCIDATE. v. a. [elucido, Latin.] To explain; to clear; to make plain.

To elucidate a little the matter, let us consider it.

Boyle.

We shall, in order to the elucidation of this matter, subjoin the following experiment.

Boyle.

ELUCIDATOR. n. f. [from elucidate.] Explainer; expostor; commentator.

Obscurity is brought over them by the course of ignorance and age, and yet more by their pedantic elucidators.

Abbot.

To ELUDE. v. a. [eludo, Latin.]

1. To escape by stratagem; to avoid any mischief or danger by artifice.

Several pernicious vices, notorious amongst us, escape or elude the punishment of any law yet invented.

Swift.

He who looks no higher for the motives of his conduct than the resentments of human justice, whenever he can presume himself cunning enough to elude, rich enough to bribe, or strong enough to resist it, will be under no restraint.

Rogers.

2. To mock by an unexpected escape.

My gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;

But

4 A 2

E M A

But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.
ELU'DIBLE. adj. [from elude.] Possible to be defeated.

There is not any common place more infested on than the happiness of trials by juries; yet if this blessed part of our law be eludible by power and artifice, we shall have little reason to boast.

Swift.

ELVES. The plural of elf. See ELF.

Fairy elves

Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant fees,
Or dreams he fees. Milton.

Ye sylphs and sylphids to your chief give ear;
Fays, fairies, geni, elves and demons hear. Pope.

ELVELOCK. n. f. [from elves and lock.] Knots in the hair superstitiously supposed to be tangled by the fairies.

From the like might proceed the fears of polling elvelocks, or complicated hairs of the head.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ELVISH. adj. [from elves, the plural of elf: it had been written more properly elfish.] Relating to elves, or wandering spirits.

Thou elvish mark, abortive, rioting hog!

The slave of nature, and the son of hell! Shak.

No muse hath been so bold,

Or of the latter or the old,

Those elvish secrets to unfold,

Which lie from others readings. Drayton.

Fond hopes to all, and all with hopes deceives.

Pope's Odyssey.

ELUSORY. adj. [from elude.] Tending to elude;
tending to deceive; fraudulent; deceitful; fallacious.

It may be feared they are but Parthian flights, ambuscade retreats, and elusive tergiversation.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To ELUTE. v. a. [eluo, Latin.] To wash off.

The more oily any spirit is, the more pernicious;
because it is harder to be eluted by the blood.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

To ELUTRIATE. v. a. [elutrio, Lat.] To decant;
or strain out.

The pressure of the air upon the lungs is much less than it has been computed by some; but still it is something, and the alteration of one tenth of its force upon the lungs must produce some difference in elutriating the blood as it passes through the lungs.

Arbutnot on Air.

ELYSIAN. adj. [elysiu, Latin.] Pertaining to Elysium; pleasant; deliciously soft and soothing; exceedingly delightful.

The river of life, through midst of heaven,
Rolls o'er elysian flowers her amber stream. Milt.

ELYSIUM. n. f. [Latin.] The place assigned by the heathens to happy souls; any place exquisitely pleasant.

To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth,

So should'st thou either turn my flying soul,

Or I should breathe it so into thy body,

And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

EM. A contraction of them.

For he could coin and counterfeit

New words with little or no wit;

And when with hasty noise he spoke 'em,

The ignorant for current took 'em. Hudibras.

To EMACIATE. v. a. [emacio, Latin.] To waste; to deprive of flesh.

Men after long emaciating diets wax plump, fat, and almost new. Bacon.

lean. Gray's Bill of Mortality.

To EMACIATE. v. n. To lose flesh; to pine;
to grow lean.

He emaciated and pined away in the too anxious enquiry of the sea's reciprocation, although not drowned therein. Brown.

EMACIATION. n. f. [emaciatu, Latin.]

1. The act of making lean.

2. The state of one grown lean.

Searchers cannot tell whether this emaciation or leanness were from a phthisis, or from a hectic fever. Grant.

EMACULATION. n. f. [emaculo, Latin.] The act of freeing any thing from spots or foulness.

Dict.

EMANANT. adj. [emanans, Lat.] Issuing from something else.

The first act of the divine nature, relating to the world, and his administration thereof, is an emanant act: the most wise counsel and purpose of Almighty God terminate in those two great transient or emanant acts or works, the work of creation and providence. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To EMANATE. v. n. [emano, Latin.] To issue or flow from something else.

EMANATION. n. f. [emanatio, Latin.]

1. The act of issuing or proceeding from any other substance.

Aristotle said, that it streamed by connatural result and emanation from God, the infinite and eternal Mind, as the light issues from the sun. South.

2. That which issues from another substance;
an efflux; effluvia.

The experience of those profitable and excellent emanations from God, may be, and commonly are, the first motive of our love. Taylor.

Another way of attraction is delivered by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvia, which, after some distance, retracteth unto itself; as in syrops, oils, and viscosities, which spun, at length retire into their former dimensions. Brown.

Such were the features of her heav'nly face;
Her limbs were form'd with such harmonious grace,

So faultless was the frame, as if the whole

Had been an emanation of the soul. Dryden.

The letters, every judge will see, were by no means efforts of the genius, but emanations of the heart. Pope.

Each emanation of his fires

That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires;
Each act he prompts, each charm he can create;

Whatever he gives, are giv'n for you to hate. Pope.

EMANATIVE. adj. [from emano, Lat.] Issuing from another. Dict.

To EMANCIPATE. v. a. [emancipo, Latin.]
To set free from servitude; to restore to liberty.

Having received the probable inducements of truth, we become emancipated from testimonial engagements. Brown.

By the twelve tables, only those were called unto the intestate succession of their parents that were in the parents power, excluded all emancipat- ed children. Ayliffe's Paveron.

They emancipated themselves from dependence.

Arbutnot.

EMANCIPATION. n. f. [from emancipate.] The act of setting free; deliverance from slavery.

take away the margin or edge of any thing. Dict.

To EMASCULATE. v. a. [emasculo, Lat.]

1. To castrate; to deprive of virility.

When it is found how many ewes, suppose twenty, one ram will serve, we may geld nineteen, or thereabouts; for if you emasculate but ten, you shall, by promiscuous copulation, hinder the increase. Grant's Bill of Mortality.

2. To effeminate; to weaken; to vitiate by unmanly softness.

From wars and from affairs of state abstain;
Women emasculate a monarch's reign. Dryden.

Dangerous principles impose upon our understandings, emasculate our spirits, and spoil our temper. Collier.

In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen.

To EMBALL. v. a. [emballer, French; embal- fumar, Spanish.] To impregnate a body with aromatics, that it may resist putrefaction.

Emball me,

Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.

Shakespeare.

I would shew future times

What you were, and teach them t' urge towards such:

Verse emballs virtue, and tombs or thrones of rhymes,

Preserve frail transitory fame as much

As spice doth bodies from corrupt air's touch.

Donne.

Muse! at that name thy sacred sorrows shed;
Those tears eternal that emball the dead. Pope.

EMBALLER. n. f. [from emball.] One that practises the art of embalming and preserving bodies.

The Romans were not so good embalmers as the Egyptians, so the body was utterly consumed.

Bacon's Natural History.

To EMBAR. v. a. [from bar.]

1. To shut; to enclose.

Themselves for fear into his jaws to fall,
He forc'd to castle strong to take their flight;

Where fast embar'd in mighty brazen wall,
He has them now four years besieg'd to make them thrall. Spenser.

In form of airy members fair embar'd
His spirits pure were subject to our fight. Fairfax.

2. To stop; to hinder by prohibition; to block up.

Translating the mart unto Calais, he embar'd all further trade for the future. Bacon's Henry VII.

If this commerce 'twixt heav'n and earth were not

Embar'd, and all this traffic quite forgot,
She, for whose loss we have lamented thus,

Would work more fully and powerfully on us.

Donne.

EMBARCATION. n. f. [from embarc.]

1. The act of putting on shipboard.

The French gentlemen were very solicitous for the embarkation of the army, and for the departure of the fleet. Clarendon.

2. The act of going on shipboard.

EMBARGO. n. f. [embargo, Spanish.] A prohibition to pass; in commerce, a stop put to trade.

He knew that the subjects of Flanders drew so great commodity from the trade of England, as by embargo they would soon wax weary of Perkin.

Bacon's Henry VII.

After an embargo of our trading ships in the river of Bourdeaux, and other points of sovereign affront, there did succeed the action of Rheez.

Wotton.

I was not much concerned, in my own particular, for the embargo which was laid upon it. Dryden.

To EMBARQUE. v. a. [embarquer, French.]

1. To put on shipboard.

Of mankind, so numerous late,
All left, in one small bottom swam embarc'd.

I saw my friend a little embarrassed, and turned away.

Spektor.

EMBA'RRASSMENT. n. f. [from embarrass.] Perplexity; entanglement.

Let your method be plain, that your hearers may run through it without embarrassment, and take a clear view of the whole.

Watts's Logic.

To EMBA'SE. v. a. [from basse.]

1. To vitiate; to depauperate; to lower; to deprave; to impair.

Grains are annual, so that the virtue of the seed is not worn out, whereas in a tree it is embased by the ground.

Bacon.

I have no service or ignoble end in my present labour, which may, on either side, restrain or embase the freedom of my poor judgment.

Wotton.

I will rather chuse to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embased flexibility shall be forced to bend.

King Charles.

A pleasure high, rational, and angelical; a pleasure embased with no appendant sting; but such a one as being honey in the mouth, never turns to gall or gravel in the belly.

South.

2. To degrade; to vilify.

Joy of my life, full oft for loying you

I blest my lot, that was so lucky plac'd;

But then the more your own mishap I rue,

That are so much by fo mean love embas'd.

Spenser.

And to the bright embassadors replies.

Gavith's Ovid.

EM'PASSAGE. n. f. [It may be observed, that

EM'BASSY. } though our authours write almost indiscriminately embassador or ambassador, embassage or ambassage; yet there is scarcely an example of ambassy, all concurring to write ambassy.]

1. A publick message; a message concerning business between princes or states.

Freth embassy and suits,

Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter,

Will I lend ear to.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

When he was at Newcattle he sent a solemn embassage unto James king of Scotland, to treat and conclude a peace with him.

Bacon's Henry VII.

The peace polluted thus, a chosen band
He first commissions to the Latian land,

In threat'ning embassy.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. Any solemn message.

He sends the angels on embassies with his decrees.

Taylor.

3. An errand in an ironical sense.

A bird was made fly with such art to carry a written embassage among the ladies, that one might say, If a live bird, how taught? If dead, how made?

Sidney.

Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,

Doth not thy embassage belong to me;

And am I last that know it?

Shakespeare's Richard II.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. a. [from battle.] To range in order or array of battle.

The English are embattled;

To horse! you gallant princes, strait to horse!

Shakespeare.

I could drive her from the ward of her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me.

Shakespeare.

On their embattl'd ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Embattl'd nations strive in vain

The hero's glory to restrain:

Streams arm'd with rocks, and mountains red with fire,

In vain against his force conspire.

Prior.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. n. To be ranged in battle array.

The night

Is shiny, and they say we shall embattle
By the second hour of the morn.

Shakespeare.

To EMBA'T. v. a. [from baigner, to bathe, French.]

Asterbury.

EMBERING. n. f. The ember days. A word used by old authours, now obsolete.

For causes good for many ways,
Keep emberings well, and fasting days;

What law commands, we ought to obey,
For Friday, Saturn, and Wednesd'ay.

Tusser.

EMBERS. n. f. Without a singular [æmynia, Saxon, ashes; emmyria, Islandick, hot ashes or cinders.] Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer, almost to the very neck: let the bottle be well stopp'd, let it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days.

Bacon's Natural History.

If the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,

While glowing embers through the room

Teach light to counterfeit a gloom.

Milton.

While thus heav'n's highest counsels, by the low Footsteps of their effects, he trac'd too well,

He tost his troubled eyes, embers that glow

Now with new rage, and wax too hot for hell.

Crashaw.

He said, and rose, as holy zeal inspires;
He rakes hot embers, and renews the fires.

Dryden's Virgil

EMBERWEEK. n. f. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from embers or ashes strewd by penitents on their heads; but Nelson decides in favour of Marschal, who derives it from ymbren or embren, a course or circumvolution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days, at the four seasons are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, the feast of Pentecost, September 14, December 13.

Makes visitation. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

EMPERY, n. f. [empire, French; imperium, Lat.] Empire; sovereignty; dominion. A word out of use.

A lady
So fair, and fasten'd to an emperry,
Would make the great'st king double. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
But as successively from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your emperry, your own. Shakespeare.

EMPHASIS, n. f. [emphasi.] A remarkable stress laid upon a word or sentence; particular force impressed by stile or pronunciation.

Oh, that brave Caesar!

EMPO'RIUM. n. f. [ἐμπορίον.] A place of merchandize; a mart; a town of trade; a commercial city.

And while this fam'd emporium we prepare,
The British ocean shall such triumphs boast,

That those who now disdain our trade to share,
Shall rob like pirates on our wealthy coast. Dryd.

I take the prosperous estate of this great emporium to be owing to those instances of charity.

To EMPO'VERISH. v. a. [paupere, French.]
1. To make poor; to depauperate; to reduce to indigence.

Since they might talk better as they lay together,
they empoverish'd their cloaths to enrich their bed, which, for that night, might well scorn the shrine of Venus. Sidney.

Your sounds aloud, and tells us you excel
No less in courage than in fing'ring well;
While, unconcern'd, you let your country know,
They have empoverish'd themselves, not you. Waller.

For sense of honour, if it empoverish'd a man, it is, in his esteem, neither honour nor sense. South.

Fresh roses bring,
To strow my bed, 'till the empoverish'd Spring Confess her want. Prior.

2. To lessen fertility; as, tillage empoverishes land.

EMPO'VERISHER. n. f. [from empoverish.]

EMPO'VERISHMENT. n. f. [from empoverish.]
Depauperation; cause of poverty; drain of wealth.

Being paid as it is, now some, and then some, it is no great burden unto her, nor any great empoverishment to her coffers. Spenser's State of Ireland.

All appeals for justice, or appellations for favour or preferment to another country, are so many grievous empoverishments. Swift's View of Ireland.

To EMPO'WER. v. a. [from power.]

1. To authorize; to commission; to give power or authority to any purpose.

You are empowered, when you please, to give the final decision of wit. Dryd. Jew. Dedication.

The government shall be empowered to grant commissions to all Protestants whatsoever. Swift.

2. To give natural force; to enable.

Does not the same power that enables them to heal, empower them to destroy? Baker on Leaven.

EM'PRESS. n. f. [contracted from emperess, which is retained by Johnson in the following lines.]

1. The queen of an emperour.

Let your nimble feet
Tread subtle circles, that may always meet
In point to him; and figures, to express
The grace of him, and his great emperess. Ben. Jonson.

2. A female invested with imperial dignity; a female sovereign.

Empress of this fair world, resplendent Eve! Milton.

Yet, London, empress of the northern clime,
By an high fate thou greatly didst expire. Dryden.

Wisdom, thou say'st, from heav'n receiv'd her birth;

Her beams transmitted to the subject earth:
Yet this great empress of the human soul,
Does only with imagin'd power controul,
If rebels passion, by rebellious sway,
Compels the weak usurper to obey. Prior.

EMPRISE. n. f. [emprise, French.] Attempt of danger; undertaking of hazard; enterprise.

Noble minds of yore, allied were
In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. Fairy Queen.

A double conquest must you make,
If you achieve renown by this emprise. Fairfax.

Fierce faces threaten wars;
Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise. Milton.

Thus, 'till the sun had travell'd half the skies,
Ambash'd we lie, and wait the bold emprise. Pope's Odyssey.

EMPTIER. n. f. [from empty.] One that empties; one that makes any place void by taking away what it contained.

The emptiers have emptied them out, and married their vine-branches. Nabun, ii. 2.

EMPTINESS. n. f. [from empty.]
1. Absence of plenitude; inanity.

Where cities stood,
Well fence'd, and numerous, desolation reigns,
And emptiness; dismay'd, unfed, unhous'd,
The widow and the orphan stroll. Philips.

2. The state of being empty.

His coffers found
With hollow poverty and emptiness. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

3. A void space; vacuity; vacuum.

Nor could another in your room have been,
Except an emptiness had come between. Dryden.

The ordinary air in which we live and respire, is of so thin a composition, that sixteen thousand one hundred and forty-nine parts of its dimensions are mere emptiness and nothing; and the remaining one only, material and real substance. Bentley.

4. Want of substance or solidity.

'Tis this which causes the graces and the loves to take up their habitations in the hardest marble, and to subsist in the emptiness of light and shadow. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Preface.

5. Unsatisfactoriness; inability to fill up the desires.

O frail estate of human things,
Now to our cost your emptiness we know. Dryden.

of things here, according as they are or are not of use, in relation to what is to come after. Alterb.

6. Vacuity of head; want of knowledge.

Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,
As shallow streams run dimpling all the way. Pope.

EMPTION. n. f. [emptio, Latin] The act of purchasing; a purchase.

There is a dispute among the lawyers, whether Glaucus his exchanging his golden armour with the brazen one of Tydides, was emption or commutation. Arbutnot on Coins.

EMPTY. adj. [æmtiz, Saxon.]

1. Void; having nothing in it; not full.

I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart: but the saying is true, the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Shakespeare's Henry V.

The pit was empty, there was no water in it. Gen. xxxvii.

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty
one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that;
there still remains one vessel empty. Burnet's Theory.

2. Evacuated; no longer full.

Himself he frees by secret means unseen,
His shackles empty left, himself escaped clean. Spenser.

3. Devoid; unfurnished.

Art thou thus boldened, man, by thy distress,
That in civility thou seem'st to empty? Shakespeare.

Mr. Boyle has shewed, that air may be rarified above ten thousand times in vessels of glass; and the heavens are much emptier of air than any vacuum we can make below. Newton.

4. Unsatisfactory; unable to fill the mind or desires.

Pleas'd in the silent shade with empty praise. Pope.

5. Without any thing to carry; unburthened; unfreighted.

They beat him, and sent him away empty. Matt.

When ye go, ye shall not go empty. Exodus.

He alleges that the fatyrs carried platters full of fruit in their hands; but if they had been empty handed, had they been ever the larger fatyrs? Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

Yet all the little that I got, I spent;
And still return'd as empty as I went. Dryden's Virgil.

6. Hungry.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty;
And till the stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd,
For then she never looks upon her lure. Shakespeare.

7. Vacant of head; ignorant; unskilful; unfurnished with materials for thought.

How comes it that so many worthy and wise men depend upon so many unworthy and empty headed fools! Raleigh.

His answer is a handsome way of exposing an empty, trifling, pretending pedant; the wit lively, the satyr courtly and severe. Felton on the Classics.

8. Unfruitful; barren.

Seven empty ears blasted with the east wind. Gen.

Israel is an empty vine. Hosea.

9. Wanting substance; wanting solidity; vain.

The god of sleep there hides his heavy head,
And empty dreams on every leaf are spread. Dryden's Æneid.

To EMPTV. v. a. [from the adjective.] To evacuate; to exhaust; to deprive of that which was contained in it.

Boundless intemperance,
In nature is a tyranny: it hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The emptiers have emptied them out, and married their vine-branches. Nab. ii. 2.

Sheep are often blind by fulness of blood: cut their tails, and empty them of their blood. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The Euxine sea is conveniently situated for trade, by the communication it has both with Asia and Europe, and the great navigable rivers that empty themselves into it. Arbutnot.

To EMPURPLE. v. a. [from purple.] To make of a purple colour; to discolour with purple.

Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off, the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone, Empurpled with celestial roses smil'd. Milton.

It hath empuzzled the enquiries of others to apprehend, and enforced them unto strange conceptions to make out. Brown.

EMPYEMA. n. f. [ἐμπευμα.] A collection of purulent matter in any part whatsoever; generally used to signify that in the cavity of the breast only, and which sometimes happens upon the opening of abscesses, or ulcerations of the lungs, or membranes inclosing the breast. Quincy.

An empyema, or a collection of purulent matter in the breast, if not suddenly cured, doth undoubtedly impel the patient into a phthisical consumption. Harvey.

There is likewise a consumption from an empyema, after an inflammation of the lungs; which may be known from a weight upon the diaphragm, oppression of the lungs, a difficulty of breathing, and inability to lie on one side, which is that which is found. Arbutnot on Diet.

EMPYREAL. adj. [ἐμπευρεα.] Formed of the element of fire; refined beyond aerial; pertaining to the highest and purest region of heaven. [Tickell accents it on the penult.]

Now went forth the morn,
Such as in highest heav'n, array'd in gold Empyrean. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Go, soar with Plato to th' empyrean sphere,
To the first good, first perfect, and first fair. Pope.

But empyrean forms, howe'er in fight
Gash'd and dismember'd, easily unite. Tickell.

EMPYREAN. n. f. [ἐμπευρεα.] The highest heaven where the pure element of fire is supposed to subsist.

Almighty Father from above,
From the pure empyrean, where he sits High thron'd above all height, bent down his eye. Milton.

Under his burning wheel
The steadfast empyrean shook throughout,
All but the throne itself of God. Milton's Paradise Lost.

 burns clear away without leaving any cinders, or adust about it. Harvey.

The hopes of an elixir insensibly evaporate, and vanish to air, or leave in the recipient a foul empyreuma. Decay of Piety.

EMPYREUMATICAL. adj. [from empyreuma.]
 Having the smell or taste of burnt substances.

Empyreumatical oils, distilled by strong fires in retorts, may be brought to emulate essential oils drawn in limbeck. Boyle.

EMPYROISIS. n. f. [ἐμπύρωση.] Conflagration;
 general fire.

The former opinion that held these cataclisms and empyres universal, was such as held that it put a total consummation unto things in this lower world, especially that of conflagration.

Halé's Origin of Mankind.

To EMULATE. v. a. [emulor, Latin.]

1. To rival; to propose as one to be equalled or excelled.
2. To imitate with hope of equality, or superior excellence.

I would have

Him emulate you: 'tis no shame to follow

The better precedent. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

Those fair ideas to my aid I'll call,

And emulate my great original. Dryden's Aureng.

What though no weeping loves thy ashes grace,

Nor polish'd marble emulate thy face. Pope.

3. To be equal to; to rise to equality with.

I see how thy eye would emulate the diamond.

Shakespeare.

We see no new-built palaces aspire,

No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

4. To imitate; to copy; to resemble.

It is likewise attended with a delirium, fury, and an involuntary laughter, the convulsion emulating this motion. Arbuthnot.

EMULATION. n. f. [emulatio, Latin.]

1. Rivalry; desire of superiority.

Mine emulation

Hath not that honour in't it had; for where

I thought to crush him in an equal force,

True sword to sword, I'll pitch at him some way,

Or wrath or craft may get him.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

There was neither envy nor emulation amongst them. Mac.

Aristotle allows that some emulation may be good, and may be found in some good men; yet envy he utterly condemns, as wicked in itself, and only to be found in wicked minds. Spratt.

The apostle exhorts the Corinthians to an holy and general emulation of the charity of the Macedonians, in contributing freely to the relief of the poor faints at Jerusalem. South.

A noble emulation heats your breast,

And your own fame now robs you of the rest:

Good actions still must be maintain'd with good,

As bodies nourish'd with resembling food. Dryden.

2. Envy; desire of depressing another: contest; contention; discord.

What madnefs rules in brainfick men,

When for so slight and frivolous a cause,

Such factious emulations shall arise! Shakespeare.

EMULATIVE. adj. [from emulate.] Inclined to emulation; rivaling; disposed to competition.

EMULATOR. n. f. [from emulate.] A rival; a competitor.

In superiours it quencheth jealousy, and layeth their competitors and emulators asleep. Bacon's Essays.

To EMULE. v. a. [emulor, Latin.] To emulate.

Not in use.

He fitting me beside, in that same shade,

Provoked me to play some pleasant fit;

Yet emulating my pipe, he took in hand

My pipe, before that emuled of many,
 And plaid thereon; for well that skill he could.

Spenser.

out.

EMULGENT. adj. [emulgens, Latin.]

1. Milking or draining out.

2. Emulgent vessels [in anatomy] are the two large arteries and veins which arise, the former from the descending trunk of the aorta, or great artery; the latter from the vena cava. They are both inserted into the kidneys; the emulgent arteries carrying blood with the serum to them, and the emulgent veins bringing it back again, after the serum has been separated therefrom by the kidneys. Harris.

It doth furnish the left emulgent with one vein.

Brown.

Through the emulgent branches the blood is brought to the kidneys, and is there freed of its serum. Cbeyne.

EMULOUS. adj. [emulus, Latin.]

1. Rivaling; engaged in competition.

What the Gaul or Moor could not effect,
 Nor emulous Carthage, with their length of spite,
 Shall be the work of one. Ben Jonson's Catiline.
 She is in perpetual diffidence, or actual enmity with her, but always emulous and suspectful of her.
Howel's Vocal Forest.

2. Desirous of superiority; desirous to rise above another; desirous of any excellence possessed by another: with of before the object of emulation.

By strength

They measure all, of other excellence

Not emulous, nor care who them excels. Milton.

By fair rewards our noble youth we raise

To emulous merit, and to thirst of praise. Prior.

Good Howard, emulous of the Grecian art. Prior.

3. Factious; contentious.

Whose glorious deeds, but in the fields of late,

Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,

And drave great Mars to faction. Shakespeare.

EMULOUSLY. adv. [from emulous.] With desire of excelling or outgoing another.

So tempt they him, and emulously vie

To bribe a voice, that empires would not buy.

Graville.

EMULSION. n. f. [emulso, Latin.] A form of medicine, by bruising oily seeds and kernels, and drawing out their substances with some liquor, that thereby becomes milky. Quincy.

The aliment is dissolved by an operation resembling that of making an emulsion; in which operation the oily parts of nuts and seeds, being gently ground in a marble mortar, and gradually mixed with some watery liquor, or dissolved into a sweet, thick, turbid, milky liquor, resembling the chyle in an animal body. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EMUNCTORIES. n. f. [emuntorium, Latin.] Those parts of the body where any thing excrementitious is separated and collected, to be in readiness for ejection. Quincy.

Superfluous matter deflows from the body under their proper emunctories. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

There are receptacles in the body of man, and emunctories to drain them of superfluous choler.

More against Atheism.

Discourfing of the lungs, I shew that they are the grand emunctory of the body; that the main end of respiration is continually to discharge and expel an excrementitious fluid out of the mass of blood.

Woodward's Natural History.

The regimen in quinsies, which proceed from an obstruction of the glands, must be to use such warm liquors as relax those glands, such as, by stimulating, open the emunctories to secrete the humour. Arbuthnot on Dist.

EN. An inseparable particle borrowed by us from the French, and by the French formed from the Latin in. Many words are uncertainly written with en or in. In many words en is changed into em for more easy pronunciation.

To ENABLE. v. a. [from abilit.] To make able; to empower; to supply with strength or ability.

If thou would'st vouchsafe to overspread
 Me with the shadow of thy gentle wing,
 I should enabled be thy acts to sing.

Spenser's Hymn on Love.

His great friendship with God might enable him, and his compassion might incline him. Atterbury.

He points out to him the way of life, strengthens his weakness, restores his lapses, and enables him to walk and persevere in it. Rogers.

To ENACT. v. a. [from act.]

1. To act; to perform; to effect. Not now in use.

 punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted. Spenser.

Valiant Talbot, above human thought,
 Enacted wonders with his sword and lance.

Shakespeare.

2. To establish by law; to decree.

It is enacted in the laws of Venice,

If it be proved against an alien,

He seeks the life of any citizen,

The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,

Shall seize on half his goods. Shakespeare.

The senate were authors of all counsels in the state; and what was by them consulted and agreed, was proposed to the people, by whom it was enacted or commanded. Temple.

3. To represent by action.

I did enact Julius Cæsar. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

crown'd;

Here blushing Flora paints th' enamell'd ground.

Pope.

I bequeath to the earl of Orrery the enamell'd silver plates, to distinguish bottles of wine by.

Swift's Last Will.

2. To lay upon another body so as to vary it.

Higher than that wall, a circling row

Of goodliest trees, loaden with fairest fruit,

Blossoms, and fruits at once of golden hue,

Appear'd with gay enamell'd colours mix'd. Milton.

To ENAMEL. v. n. To practise the use of enamel.

Though it were foolish to colour or enamel upon the glasses of telescopes, yet to gild the tubes of of them may render them more acceptable to the users, without lessening the clearness of the object.

Boyle.

ENAMEL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing enamelled, or variegated with colours fixed by fire.

Down from her eyes welled the pearles round,

Upon the bright enamel of her face;

For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil. Shakefp.

A just disdain conceived by that queen, that so wicked a rebel should prevail against her, did move and almost enforce her to fend over that mighty army. Darwin on Ireland.

7. To press with a charge. Little used.

In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannick pow'r: If he evade us there, Enforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the spoils got on the Antiates
Was ne'er distributed. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To ENFORCE. v. n. To prove; to evince; to shew beyond contradiction.

Which laws in such case we must obey, unless there be reason shewed, which may necessarily en- force that the law of reason, or of God, doth enjoin
the contrary. Hooter.

ENFORCE. n. f. [from force.] Power; strength.
Not used.

He now desires thee thrice to single fight,
As a petty enterprize of small enforce.
Milton's Agamemnon.

ENFORCEDLY. adv. [from enforce.] By violence; not voluntarily; not spontaneously; not by choice.

If thou did'st put this sow'r cold habit on,
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well, but thou Dost it enforcedly: thou'd'st courtier be,
Wert thou not beggar. Shakespeare's Timon.

ENFORCEMENT. n. f. [from enforce.]

1. An act of violence; compulsion; force offered.

Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforce- ment

With foul enfoldred smok and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies.

Fairy Queen.

To ENFRANCHISE. v. a. [from franchise.]

1. To admit to the privileges of a freeman.

The English colonies, and some sects of the Irishry, enfranchised by special charters, were admitted to the benefit of the laws. Darwin on Ireland.

Romulus was the natural parent of all those people that were the first inhabitants of Rome, or of those that were after incorporated and enfranchised into that name, city, or government.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. To set free from slavery.

Men, forbearing wine, come from drinking healths to a draught at a meal; and, lastly, to discontinue altogether: but if a man have the fortitude and resolution to enfranchise himself at once, that is the best. Bacon's Essays.

If they won a battle, prisoners became slaves, and continued so in their generations, unless enfran- chised by their masters. Temple.

3. To free or release from custody.

His mistress
Did hold his eyes lockt in her crystal looks.
—Belike, that now she hath enfranchis'd them,
Upon some other pawn for fealty. Shakespeare.

4. To denizen; to endenizen.

These words have been enfranchised amongst us.
Watts.

ENFRANCHISEMENT. n. f. [from enfranchise.]

1. Investiture of the privileges of a denizen.

The incorporating a man into any society, or body politick. For example, he that is by charter made denizen of England, is said to be enfranchis- ed; and so is he that is made a citizen of London, or other city, or burghs of any town corporate, because he is made partaker of those liberties that appertain to the corporation. Cowell.

His coming hither hath no farther scope,
Than for his linal royalties, and to beg Enfranchisement immediate on his knees.
Shakespeare's Richard II.

2. Release from prison or from slavery.

Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage and embrace
His golden uncontroll'd enfranchisement.
Shakespeare's Richard II.

ENFROZEN. particip. [from frozen.] Congealed with cold. Not used.

Yet to augment the anguish of my smart,
Thou hast enfrozen her disdainful breast,
That no one drop of pity there doth rest.
Spenser on Love.

To ENGAGE. v. a. [engager, French.]

Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my means. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

2. To impawn; to stake.

They most perfidiously condemn
Those that engag'd their lives for them. Hudibras.

3. To enlist; to bring into a party.

All wicked men are of a party against religion:
some lust or interest engages them against it.
Tiddison.

4. To embark in an affair.

So far had we engaged ourselves, unfortunate souls, that we list'd not to complain, since our complaints could not but carry the greatest accusation to ourselves. Sidney.

Before I engage myself in giving any answer to this objection of inconsumptible lights, I would see the effect certainly averred. Digby on Bodies.

3. Any instrument.

The sword, the arrow, the gun, with many terrible engines of death, will be well employed.

He takes the scissars, and extends The little engine on his fingers ends.

4. Any instrument to throw water upon burning houses.

Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play; And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire.

5. Any means used to bring to pass, or to effect. Usually in an ill sense.

Prayer must be divine and heavenly, which the devil with all his engines so violently opposeth.

6. An agent for another. In contempt.

They had th' especial engines been, to rear His fortunes up into the state they were.

ENGINEER n. f. [ingenieur, French.] One who manages engines; one who directs the artillery of an army.

For 'tis the sport to have the engineer Hoist with his own petard.

Him thus engag'd, Defcrying from afar, some engineer, Dext'rous to guide th' unerring charge, design'd,

By one nice shot, to terminate the war.

An author, who points his satire at a great man, is like the engineer who signalized himself by this ungenerous practice.

ENGINEERY n. f. [from engine.]

1. The act of managing artillery.

They may defend in mathematics to fortification, architecture, engineery, or navigation.

2. Engines of war; artillery.

Names fresh engrav'd appear'd of wits renown'd; I look'd again, nor could their trace be found.

2. To mark wood or stone.

Engrave the two stones with the names.

3. To impress deeply; to imprint.

It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles, in men's minds, in words of uncertain signification.

Our Saviour makes this return, fit to be engraven in the hearts of all promoters of charity.

Sounds which address the ear, are lost and die In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye, Lives long upon the mind: the faithful fight Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light.

4. [from grave.] To bury; to inhumate; to inter.

The son had charge of them, now being dead, In seemly fort their corpes to engrave,

And deck with dainty flowers their bridal bed.

ENGRAVER n. f. [from engrave.] A cutter in stone or other matter.

Images are not made in the brain itself, as the pencil of a painter or engraver makes the images in the table, but are imprinted in a wonderful method in the soul.

To ENGRIEVE v. a. [from grieve.] To pain; to vex; to afflict; to disconsolate.

The gnawing anguish, and sharp jealousy, Which his sad speech infixed in my breast, Rankled so fore, and fester'd inwardly, That my griev'd mind could find no rest.

Aches, and hurts, and corns, do engrieve either towards rain, or towards frost.

To ENGROSS v. a. [engross, French.]

1. To thicken; to make thick.

But more happy he than wife, Of that sea's nature did him not avise, The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were, Engross'd with mud, which did them foul agriefe, That every weighty thing they did appear.

2. To

2. To encrease in bulk.
Though pillars, by channeling, be seemingly engross'd to our sight, yet they are truly weakened in themselves. Watson.

Not sleeping, to engross his idle body;
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

4. To seize in the grofs; to seize the whole of any thing.
If thou engross'st all the griefs as thine,
Thou robb'st me of a moiety. Shakespeare.
Those two great things that to engross the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler fort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.

A dog, a parrot, or an ape,
Or some worse brute in human shape,
Engross the fancies of the fair. Swift.

5. To purchase the whole of any commodity for the sake of selling at a high price.

6. To copy in a large hand.
Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

A clerk, foredoom'd his father's foul to cross,
Who pens a stanza when he should engross. Pope.

ENGROSSER. n. f. [from engross.] He that purchases large quantities of any commodity, in order to sell it at a high price.

A new sort of engrossers, or forestallers, having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen in the woollen manufactures, out of their warehouses, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

ENGROSSMENT. n. f. [from engross.] Appropriation of things in the grofs; exorbitant acquisition.

Our thighs are pack'd with wax, our mouths with honey:
We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains! This bitter taste Yield his engrossments to the dying father.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Those held their immoderate engrossments of power and favour by no other tenure than presumption.
Swift.

TO ENGWARD. v. a. [from guard.] To protect;
to defend; to surround as guards. Not used.

A hundred knights! yes, that on ev'ry dream
He may enguard his dotage with their pow'rs,
And hold our lives at mercy.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

TO ENHAUCE. v. a. [from hauser, enhauser, Fr.]
1. To lift up; to raise on high. A sense now obsolete.

Both of them high at once their hands enbanc'd,
And both at once their huge blows down did sway.
Spenser.

2. To raise; to advance; to heighten in price.
The desire of money is every where the same:
its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enbances its price, and increases the scramble.
Locke.

3. To raise in esteem.
What is it but the experience of want that enbances the value of plenty? L'Estrange.

The remembrance of the difficulties we now undergo, will contribute to enbance our pleasure.
Atterbury.

4. To aggravate; to increase from bad to worse.
To believe or pretend that whatever our hearts incite is the will of God within us, is the principle of villainy that hath acted in the children of disobedience, enbanc'd and improved with circumstances of greater impudence than the most abominable heathens were guilty of. Hammond.

The relation which those children bore to the priesthood, contributed to enbance their guilt, and increase their punishment. Atterbury.

ENHAUCEMENT. n. f. [from enbance.]
1. Encrease; augmentation of value.

Their yearly rents are not improved, the landlords making no less gain by fines than by enbancment of rents. Bacon.

2. Aggravation; encrease of ill.

Jocular slanders have, from the slightness of the temptation, an enbancement of guilt.
Government of the Tongue.

ENIGMA. n. f. [from enigma, Lat. divinatio.] A riddle: an obscure question; a position expressed in remote and ambiguous terms.

The dark enigma will allow
A meaning; which, if well I understand,
From sacrifice will free the god's command.
Dryden.

A custom was amongst the ancients of proposing an enigma at festivals, and adjudging a reward to him that solved it. Pope.

ENIGMATICAL. adj. [from enigma.]
1. Obscure; ambiguously or darkly expressed.
Your answer, sir, is enigmatical.
Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

Enigmatical deliveries comprehend useful veri-ties; but being mistaken by liberal expositors at first, they have been misunderstood by most since.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Whilst they affect enigmatical obscurity, they puzzle the readers of their divulged processes.
Boyle.

Athenæus gives instances of the enigmatical propositions in use at Athens, and of the forfeitures and rewards upon the solution or non-solution.
Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

2. Cloudy; obscurely conceived or apprehended.

Faith here is the assent to those things which come to us by hearing, and are so believed by adherence, or dark enigmatical knowledge, but hereafter are seen or known demonstratively. Hammond.

ENIGMATICALITY. adv. [from enigma.] In a sense different from that which the words in their familiar acceptation imply.

Homer speaks enigmatically, and intends that these monsters are merely the creation of poetry.
Broome.

ENIGMATIST. n. f. [from enigma.] One who deals in obscure and ambiguous matters; maker of riddles.

That I may deal more ingenuously with my reader than the abovementioned enigmatist has done,
I shall present him with a key to my riddle.
Addison's Whig Examiner.

TO ENJOIN. v. a. [from enjoindre, French.] To direct; to order; to prescribe. It is more authoritative than direct, and less imperative than command.

To satisfy the good old man,
I would bend under any heavy weight
That he'll enjoin me to. Shakep. Much Ado.

Monks and philosophers, and such as do continually enjoin themselves. Bacon's Natural History.

It endeavours to secure every man's interest, by enjoining that truth and fidelity be inviolably preserved. Tillotson.

ENJOINER. n. f. [from enjoin.] One who gives injunctions. Dict.

ENJOINMENT. n. f. [from enjoin.] Direction; command.

Critical trial should be made by publick enjoin-ment, whereby determination might be settled beyond debate. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO ENJOY. v. a. [from joir, enjoir, French.]
1. To feel or perceive with pleasure; to have a pleasing sense of; to be delighted with.
I could enjoy the pangs of death,
And smile in agony. Addison's Cato.

2. To obtain possession or fruition of.
Edward the faint, in whom it pleas'd God, righteous and just, to let England see what a blef-sing sin and iniquity would not suffer it to enjoy.
Hooker.

He, who, to enjoy
Plato's elysium, leap'd into the sea, Cleombrotus. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To please; to gladden; to exhilarate; to glad; to delight. This sense is usual with the reciprocal pronoun, and is derived from enjoir.
Creatures are made to enjoy themselves, as well as to serve us. More against Atheism.

When a man shall, with a sober, sedate, diabolical rancour, look upon and enjoy himself in the fight of his neighbour's sin and shame, can he plead the instigation of any appetite in nature?

South.

TO ENJOY. v. n. To live in happiness.
Then I shall be no more;
And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct. Milton.

ENJOYER. n. f. [from enjoy.] One that has fruition or possession. Dict.

ENJOYMENT. n. f. [from enjoy.] Pleasure;
happiness; fruition.
His hopes and expectations are bigger than his enjoyments. Tillotson.

TO ENKINDLE. v. a. [from kindle.]
1. To set on fire; to inflame; to put in a flame.
Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature
To quit this horrid act. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. To rouse passions; to set the soul into a flame.

Your hand
Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled.
Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

3. To incite to any act or hope.
Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those who gave the thane of Cawder to me, Promis'd no less to them?
—That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO ENLARGE. v. a. [from enlargir, French.]
1. To make greater in quantity or appearance.
The wall, in lustre and effect like glass,
Which o'er each object casting various dyes,
Enlarges some, and others multiplies. Pope.

2. To encrease any thing in magnitude; to extend.
Where there is something both lasting and scarce, and so valuable to be hoarded up, there men will not be apt to enlarge their possessions of land. Locke.

3. To encrease by representation; to magnify; to exaggerate.

4. To dilate; to expand.
O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you,
our heart is enlarged. 2 Cor. vi. 11.

5. To set free from limitation.
Though she appear honest to me, yet at other places she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

6. To extend to more purposes or uses.
It hath grown from no other root than only a desire to enlarge the necessary use of the word of God, which desire hath begotten an error, enlarging it farther than soundness of truth will bear.
Hooker.

7. To amplify; to aggrandise.
This is that science which would truly enlarge mens minds, were it studied. Locke.

Could the mind, as in number, come to so small a part of extension or duration as excluded divisi-bility, that would be the indivisible unit, or idea;
by repetition of which it would make its more enlarged ideas of extension and duration. Locke.

8. To release from confinement.
Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person. Shakep. Henry V.

9. To diffuse in eloquence.
They enlarged themselves upon this subject with all the invidious insinuations they could devise.
Clarendon.

TO ENLARGE. v. n.
1. To expatiate; to speak in many words.
They appointed the chancellor of the Exchequer to enlarge upon any of those particulars. Clarendon.

This is a theme so unpleasant, I delight not to enlarge on it; rather with the memory of it were extinct. Decay of Piety.

2. To be further extended.
The caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have enlarged, until they fell out among themselves. Raleigh's Essays.

ENLARGEMENT. n. f. [from enlarge.]

1. Encrease; augmentation; farther extension.
The king afterwards enlarged the constant obedience of the city with enlargement both of liberties and of revenues. Hayward.

The ocean, which so long our hopes confin'd,
Could give no limits to his vaster mind:
Our bounds enlargement was his latest toil,
Nor hath he left us prisoners to our isle. Waller.
Here never were any islands, or other considerable parcels of land, unassied or heaped up; nor any enlargement, or addition of earth, made to the continent by the mud that is carried down into the sea by rivers. Woodward.

The commons in Rome generally pursued the enlargement of their power by more set quarrels of one entire assembly against another. Swift.

The Greek tongue received many enlargements between the time of Homer and that of Plutarch. Swift.

2. Release from confinement or servitude.

Lieutenant,

At our enlargement what are thy due fees?

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

If thou holdest thy peace at the time, then shall their enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place. Ephes. iv. 14.

3. Magnifying representation.

And all who told it, added something new;
And all who heard it, made enlargements too. Pope.

4. Expatiating speech; copious discourse.
He concluded with an enlargement upon the vices and corruptions which were got into the army. Clarendon.

ENLARGER. n. f. [from enlarge.] Amplifier; one that encreases or dilates any thing.

We shall not contentiously rejoin, but confer what is in us unto his name and honour, ready to be swallowed in any worthy enlarger. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To ENLIGHT. v. a. [from light.] To illuminate; to supply with light; to enlighten.

Wit from the first has shone on ages past,
Enlights the present, and shall warm the last. Pope.

To ENLIGHTEN. v. a. [from light.]

1. To illuminate; to supply with light.
God will enlighten my darknesses. Psalms.
As one sun shineth to the whole world, so there is no faith but this one published, the brightness whereof must enlighten all that come to the knowledge of the truth. Hooker.

2. To quicken in the faculty of vision.

His eyes were enlightened. Sam.

Love never fails to master what he finds;

The fool enlightens, and the wise he blinds. Dryden.

3. To instruct; to furnish with encrease of knowledge.

This doctrine is so agreeable to reason, that we meet with it in the writings of the enlightened heathens. Spectator.

'Tis he who enlightens our understanding, corrects our wills, and enables us to subdue our affections to the law of God. Rogers.

4. To cheer; to exhilarate; to gladden.

To enlighten with divine knowledge.

Those who were once enlightened. Hebrews.

ENLIGHTENER. n. f. [from enlighten.]

1. Illuminator; one that gives light.

O, sent from heav'n,
Enlighten of my darkness! gracious things
Thou hast reveal'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Instructor.

To ENLINK. v. a. [from link.] To chain; to connect.

Enlinks to waste and desolation.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

To ENLIVEN. v. a. [from live.]

1. To make quick; to make alive; to animate.

2. To make vigorous or active.

These great orbs thus radically brighten Primitive founts and origins of light,
Enliven worlds denied to human sight. Prior.

In a glass-house the workmen often sling in a small quantity of fresh coals, which seems to disturb the fire, but very much enlivens it. Swift.

3. To make sprightly or vivacious.

4. To make gay or cheerful in appearance.

ENLIVENER. n. f. [from enliven.] That which animates; that which puts in motion; that which invigorates.

But fire, th' enlivener of the general frame,
Is one, its operation still the same:
Its principle is in itself; while ours
Works, as confederates war, with mingled pow'rs. Dryden.

To ENLUMINE. v. a. [from enluminer, French.] To illumine; to illuminate; to enlighten. Not in use.

For having yet in his deducted spright,
Some sparks remaining of that heav'nly fire,
He is enlumin'd with that goodly light,
Unto like goodly semblance to aspire. Spenser.

ENMITY. n. f. [from enemy; as if enmity, inimicity.]

1. Unfriendly disposition; malevolence; aversion.

Their being forced to their books, in an age at enmity with all restraint, has been the reason why many have hated books. Locke.

2. Contrariety of interests or inclinations; mutual malignity.

They shall within this hour,
On a diffension of a doit, break out
In bitterest enmity. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Between thee and the woman I will put Enmity; and between thine and her feed:

Her feed shall bruise thy head, thou bruise his heel. Milton.

How far these controversies, and appearing enmities of those glorious creatures, may be carried, is not my business to shew or determine.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

3. State of opposition.

Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? James, iv. 4.

You must firmly be convinced, that every sin that you commit sets you at enmity with heaven, and will, if not forsaken, render you incapable of it. Wake's Preparation for Death.

4. Malice; mischievous attempts.

I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To wage against the enmity o' th' air. Shakspeare.

He who performs his duty in a station of great power, must needs incur the utter enmity of many, and the high displeasure of more. Atterbury.

To ENMARBLE. v. a. [from marble.] To turn to marble; to harden. Obsolete.

Their dying to delay,

Thou do'st enmarble the proud heart of her,
Whose love before their life they do prefer. Spenser.

To ENMESH. v. a. [from mesh.] To net; to entangle; to intrap.

So will I turn her virtue into pitch;

And out of her own goodness make the net
That shall enmesh them all. Shakspeare. Othello.

To ENPIERCE. v. a. [from pierce.] To transfix.

I am too fore enpiere'd with his shaft

To soar with his light feathers. Shakspeare.

ENNEAGON. n. f. [from ennea and gonia.] A figure of nine angles.

ENNEATICAL. adj. [from ennea.] Enneatical days, are every ninth day of a sickness; and enneatical years, every ninth year of one's life.

To ENNOBLE. v. a. [from ennobler, French.]

1. To raise from commonality to nobility.

Many fair promotions

Are given daily to ennoble those,
That scarce some two days since were worth a noble. Shakspeare.

2. To dignify; to aggrandize; to exalt; to raise.

God raised up the spirit of this great person, and ennobled his courage and conduct with the entire overthrow of this mighty host. South.

What can ennoble fots, or slaves, or cowards?

Alas! not all the blood of all the Howards. Pope.

3. To elevate; to magnify.

None so lovely, sweet and fair,
Or do more ennoble love. Waller.

4. To make famous or illustrious.

The Spaniards could not as invaders land in Ireland, but only ennobled some of the coats thereof with shipwreck. Bacon.

ENNOBLEMENT. n. f. [from ennoble.]

1. The act of raising to the rank of nobility.
He added, during parliament, to his former creations, the ennoblement or advancement in nobility of a few others. Bacon.

2. Exaltation; elevation; dignity;
The eternal wisdom enriched us with all ennoblements, suitable to the measures of an untraiated goodness. Glantville.

ENODATION. n. f. [from enodatio, Lat.]

1. The act of untying a knot.

2. Solution of a difficulty.

ENORMITY. n. f. [from enormous.]

1. Deviation from rule; irregularity.

2. Deviation from right; depravity; corruption.

We shall speak of the particular abuses and enormities of the government.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

That this law will be always sufficient to bridle or restrain enormity no man can warrant. Hooker.

There are many little enormities in the world which our preachers would be very glad to see removed; but at the same time dare not meddle with them, for fear of betraying the dignity of the pulpit. Addison's Guardian.

3. Atrocious crime; flagitious villany: crimes exceeding the common measure. In this sense it has a plural.

It is not a bare speculation that kings may run into enormities; the practice may be proved by example. Swift.

ENORMOUS. adj. [from enormis, Lat.]

1. Irregular; out of rule; not regulated by any stated measures.

Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait. Milton.

Nature here

Wanton'd, as in her prime, and plaid at will
Her virgin fancies, pouring forth more sweets,
Wild above rule, or art, enormous bliss! Milton.

2. Excessive beyond the limits of a regular figure.

The enormous part of the light in the circumference of every lucid point, ought to be less discernible in shorter telescopes than in longer, because the shorter transmit less light to the eye. Newton's Opticks.

3. Disordered; confused.

I shall find time

From this enormous state, and seek to give Losses their remedies. Shakspeare. King Lear.

4. Wicked beyond the common measure.

5. Exceeding in bulk the common measures: always used with some degree of dislike, or horror, or wonder.

A giant shepherd here his flock maintains,
Far from the rest, and solitary reigns;
A form enormous! far unlike the race
Of human birth, in stature, or in face. Pope's Odyssey.

ENORMOUSLY. adv. [from enormous.] Beyond measure.

One who could ever espouse a notion so enormously absurd and senseless, as that the world was framed by chance. Woodward.

ENORMOUSNESS. n. f. [from enormous.] Immeasurable excess.

When those who have no opportunity to examine our faith, see the enormousness of our works, but what should hinder them from measuring the master by the disciples? Decay of Piety.

ENOVCH. adj. [from enovch, Saxon; ganach, Gothick; genog, Dutch.] It is not easy to determine whether this word be an adjective or adverb; perhaps, when it is joined with a substantive, it is an adjective, of which enov is the plural. In other situations it seems an adverb; except that after the verb To have, or To be, either expressed or understood, it may be accounted a substantive. It is pronounced as if it were written enof. In a sufficient measure; so as may satisfy; so as may suffice.

Why would'st thou go, with one consent they cry,

When thou hast gold enough, and Emily? Dryd.
When there was not room enough for their herds, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture. Locke.

ENOUGH. n. f.

1. Something sufficient in greatness or excellence.

'Tis enough for me to have endeavoured the union of my country, whilst I continued in public employments. Temple.

The indolency and enjoyment we have, fulfilling for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change, being content, and that is enough. Locke.

Enough for me that to the list'ning swains,
First in those fields I sung the silvan strains. Pope.

I will not quarrel with the present age: it has done enough for me, in making and keeping you two my friends. Pope.

2. Something equal to a man's powers or faculties.

Some great defects and main errors in his nature, customs, and proceedings, he had enough to do to save and help, with a thousand little indistries and watches. Bacon.

ENOUGH. adv.

1. In a sufficient degree; in a degree that gives satisfaction.

2. It notes a slight augmentation of the positive degree: as, I am ready enough to quarrel; that is, I am rather quarrelsome than peaceable.

I am apt enough to think, that this same binarium of a stronger and a weaker, like unto masculine and feminine, doth hold in all living bodies. Bacon.

It is sometimes pleasant enough to consider the different notions which different persons have of the same thing. Addison.

They are now in prison at Florence; and, as it is said, treated hardly enough. Addison on Italy.

3. Sometimes it notes diminution; as, the song is well enough; that is, not quite well, though not much amiss.

4. An exclamation noting fulness or satiety.

Macbeth! beware Macduff!

Beware the thane of Fife! Dismiss me.—Enough. Shakespeare.

Henceforth I'll bear

Affliction, 'till it do cry out itself, Shakespeare. King Lear.

ENOUGH. The plural of enough. In a sufficient number.

The earth hath since born enough bleeding witnesses, that it was no want of true courage. Sidney.

The walls of the church there are enough contented to build: the marbles are polished, the roofs shine with gold, the altar hath precious stones to adorn it, and of Christ's ministers no choice at all. Hooker.

Man had selfish foes enough besides,
That, day and night, for his destruction wait. Milton.

My conquering brother will have slaves enough,
To pay his cruel vows for victory. Dryden.

There are at Rome enough modern works of architecture to employ any reasonable man. Addison on Medals.

EN-PASSANT. adv. [French.] By the way.

To ENRAGE. v. a. [enrager, French.] To irritate; to provoke; to make furious; to exasperate.

The justice of their quarrel should not so much encourage as enrage them, being to revenge the dishonour done to their king, and to chastise deceitful enemies. Hayward.

Enrag'd at this, upon the bawd I flew;
And that which most enrag'd me was, 'twas true. Walsh.

To ENRANGE. v. a. [from range.] To place regularly; to put in order.

cartilage.

ENSIGN. n. f. [ensigne, French.]
1. The flag or standard of a regiment.
Hang up your ensign, let your drums be still. Shakespeare.

The Turks still pressing on, got up to the top of the walls with eight ensigns, from whence they had repulsed the defendants. Knolles's History.

Men taking occasion from the qualities, wherein they observe often several individuals to agree, range them into sorts, in order to their naming under which individuals, according to their conformity to this or that abstract idea, come to be ranked as under ensigns. Locke.

2. Any signal to assemble.
He will lift up an ensign to the nations from far. Isaiah, v.

3. Badge; or mark of distinction, rank, or office.

Princes that fly, their sceptres left behind,
Contempt or pity, where they travel, find;
The ensigns of our pow'r about we bear,
And ev'ry land pays tribute to the fair. Waller.
The marks or ensigns of virtues contribute, by their nobleness to the ornament of the figures; as the decorations belonging to the liberal arts, to war or sacrifices. Dryden.

4. The officer of foot who carries the flag.
[Formerly written ancient.]

ENSIGNBEARER. n. f. [ensign and bear.] He that carries the flag; the ensign.

against heaven, he had been a fit ensignbearer for that company. Sidney.

To ENSLAVE. v. a. [from slave.]
1. To reduce to servitude; to deprive of liberty.
The conquer'd also, and enslav'd by war,
Shall, with their freedom lost, their virtue lose. Milton.

I to do this! I, whom you once thought brave,
To sell my country, and my king enslave! Dryden.
Long draughts of sleep his monstrous limbs enslave;
He reels, and falling fills the spacious cave. Dryden's Aeneid.

He is certainly the most subjected, the most enslaved, who is in his understanding. Locke.

While the balance of power is equally held,
the ambition of private men gives neither danger
nor fear, nor can possibly enslave their country. Swift.

2. To make over to another as his slave or bond-man.

No man can make another man to be his slave, unless he hath first enslaved himself to life and death, to pleasure or pain, to hope or fear: command those passions, and you are freer than the Parthian king. Taylor's Rule of living body.

The more virtuously any man lives, and the less he is enslaved to any lust, the more ready he is to entertain the principles of religion. Tillotson.

A man, not having the power of his own life, cannot by compact, or his own consent, enslave himself to any one, nor put himself under the arbitrary power of another, to take away life when he pleases. Locke.

ENSLAVEMENT. n. f. [from enslave.] The state of servitude; slavery; abject subjection.

The children of Israel, according to their method of sinning, after mercies, and thereupon returning to a fresh enslavement to their enemies, had now passed seven years in cruel subjection. Saath.

ENSLAVER. n. f. [from enslave.] He that reduces others to a state of servitude.

What indignation in her mind,
Against enslavers of mankind! Swift.
To ENSUE. v. a. [ensuere, French.] To follow; to pursue;

Flee evil, and do good; seek peace, and ensue it. Common Prayer.

But now these Epicures begin to smile,
And say, my doctrine is more safe than true;
And that I fondly do myself beguile,
While these receiv'd opinions I ensue. Davies.

To ENSUE. v. n.

1. To follow as a consequence to premises.
Let this be granted, and it shall hereupon plainly ensue, that the light of scripture once shining in the world, all other light of nature is therewith in such sort drowned, that now we need it not. Hooker.

2. To succeed in a train of events, or course of time.

The man was noble;
But with his last attempt he wip'd it out,
Destroy'd his country, and his name remains
To the ensuing age abhorr'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Bishops are placed by collation of the king, without any precedent election or confirmation ensuing. Hayward.

Of worse deeds worse sufferings must ensue. Milt.
With mortal heat each other shall pursue;
What wars, what wounds, what slaughter shall ensue! Dryden.

Impute not then those ills which may ensue
To me, but those who with incessant hate course. Charendon.

To ENTRANCE. v. n. [from trance; trans, Fr.
from trans, Latin, to pass over; to pass for a time from one region to another.]

1. To put into a trance; to withdraw the soul wholly to other regions, while the body appears to lie in dead sleep.

2. To put into an extasy; to make insensible of present objects.

With delight I was entranced, and carried so far from myself, as that I am sorry that you ended so soon. Spenser.

Adam, now enforc'd to close his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd.

Milton.

And I so ravish'd with her heav'nly note,
I stood entranc'd, and had no room for thought;
But all o'erpower'd with ecstasy of bliss,
Was in a pleasing dream of paradise. Dryden.

To ENTRAP. v. a. [from trap.]

1. To ensnare; to catch in a trap or snare.

Take heed, mine eyes, how ye do stare
Henceforth too rashly on that guileful net;
In which, if ever eyes entrapped are,
Out of her bands ye by no means shall get.

Spenser.

The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now entrapt the noble-minded Talbot.

Shakespeare.

2. To involve unexpectedly in difficulties or

Iaac entreated the Lord for his wife.

Gen. xxxv. 21.

2. To prevail upon by solicitation.

I have a wife, whom I protest I love;
I would she were in heaven, so she could Entreat some pow'r to change this curriish Jew.

Shakespeare.

The Lord was entreated of him, and Rebecca his wife conceived. Gen. xxv. 21.

It were a fruitless attempt to appease a power, whom no prayers could entreat, no repentance reconcile. Rogers.

3. To treat or use well or ill.

Whereas thy servant worketh truly, entreat him not evil. Ecclus. vii. 20.

Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?
Entreat her not the worse in that I pray
You use her well. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Well I entreated her, who well deserv'd:
I call'd her often; for she always serv'd:
Use made her person easy to my sight,
And ease insensibly produc'd delight. Prior.

4. To entertain; to amuse. Not used.

My lord, I must entreat the time alone.

—God shield I should disturb devotion. Shakesp.

5. To entertain; to receive. Not in use.

The garden of Proserpine this night,
And in the midst thereof a silver feat,
With a thick arbour goodly overlight,
In which she often us'd, from open heat,
Herself to shroud, and pleasures to entreat.

Fairy Queen.

ward the North pole, of which I shall have farther occasion to entreat. Hakewill.

3. To make a petition.

They charged me, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, or any way sustain him. Shakespeare.

The janizaries entreated for them, as valiant men.

Knolles.

ENTREATANCE. n. f. [from entreat.] Petition;
entreaty; solicitation; not used.

These two entreatance made they might be heard,
Nor was their just petition long deny'd. Fairfax.

ENTREATY. n. f. [from entreat.] Petition; prayer; solicitation; supplication; request.

ENV

If my weak orator

Can from his mother win the duke of York, Anon expect him here; but if the be Obdurate to entreaties, God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege Of sanctuary. Shakespeare's Richard III.
ENTREMETS. n. f. [French.] Small plates set between the main dishes.

Chards of beet are plants of white beet tranplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large white main shoot, which is the true
chard used in pottages and entremets.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

ENTRY. n. f. [from enter; entrée, French.]

1. The passage by which any one enters a house.

Some there are that know the resorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it;
like a house that hath convenient stairs and entries,
but never a fair room. Bacon.

A strait long entry to the temple led,
Blind with high walls, and horror over head.

Dryden.

Is all this hurry made

On this account, because thou art afraid
A dirty hall or entry should offend
The curious eye of thy invited friend?

Dryden's Juvenal.

We proceeded through the entry, and were necessarily kept in order by the situation. Taiter.

2. The act of entrance; ingress.

Bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emollition; and the mixture of oil and water is better than either of them alone, because water entereth better into the pores, and oil after entry softeneth better. Bacon's Natural History.

The lake of Constance is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison on Italy.

By the entry of the chyle and air into the blood,
by the lacteals, the animal may again revive.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To cover; to hide; to surround.

The best and wholesomest spirits of the night envelop you, good provost.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

A cloud of smoke envelops either host,
And all at once the combatants are lost:
Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen,
Couriers with couriers jostling, men with men.

Dryden.

It is but to approach nearer, and that mist that enveloped them will remove. Locky.

Nocturnal shades.

This world envelops, and th' inclement air
Persuades men to repel benumbing frosts. Phil.

3. To line; to cover on the inside,

His iron coat, all overgrown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Darkened with filthy dust. Fairy Queen.

ENVELOPE. n. f. [French.] A wrapper; an outward case; an integument; a cover.

Send thee to paper-sparing Pope;

And, when he fits to write,
No letter with an envelope
Could give him more delight. Swift.

To ENVENOM. v. a. [from venom.]

1. To tinge with poison; to poison; to impregnate with venom. It is never used of the person to whom poison is given, but of the draught, meat, or instrument by which it is conveyed.

ENV

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand, Unbated and envenom'd. Shakespeare.
Alcides, from Oechalia crown'd
With conquest, felt th' envenom'd robe, and tore,
Through pain, up by the roots Theſſalian pines. Milton.

Nor with envenom'd tongue to blast the fame
Of harmleſs men. Philips.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely Envenoms him that bears it! Shakespeare. As you like it.

3. To enrage; to exasperate.
With her full force she threw the poiſ'nous dart,
And fix'd it deep within Amata's heart;
That thus envenom'd ſhe might kindle rage,
And ſacrifice to ſtrife her houſe and husband's age. Dryden.

ENVIALE. adj. [from envy.] Deſerving envy;
ſuch as may excite envy.

They, in an enviable mediocrity of fortune, do happily poſſeſs themſelves. Carver's Surv. of Corn.

ENVIER. n. f. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that deſires the downfall of another.

Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments; for that enviers will give them that attribute, to the diſadvantage of their virtues. Bacon's Eſſays.

They ween'd
To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To ſet the envier of his ſtate, the proud Aſpirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain. Milton.

All preferments in church and ſtate were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers diſcountenanced. Clarendon.

ENVIOUS. adj. [from envy.]
1. Infecte with envy; pained by the excellence or happineſs of another.

A man of the moſt envious diſpoſition that ever infecte the air with his breath, whoſe eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor ears bear the burden of any man's praiſe. Sidney.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To ſilence envious tongues. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

2. Sometimes with againſt.
Be not thou envious againſt evil men. Proverbs, xxiv. 19.

3. Sometimes with at.
Neither be thou envious at the wicked. Proverbs, xxiv. 19.

4. Commonly with of.
Sure you miſtake the precept or the tree;
Heav'n cannot envious of his bleſſings be. Dryden.

ENVIOUSLY. adv. [from envious.] With envy; with malignity; with ill-will, excited by another's good.

Damned ſpirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviouſly to obſtruct the ways that may lead us thither. Duppa.

How enviouſly the ladies look,
When they ſurpriſe me at my book!
And ſure as they're alive at night,
As ſoon as gone, will ſhew their ſpight. Swift.

To ENVIRON. v. a. [from environner, French.]

1. To ſurround; to encloſe; to encircle.
I ſtand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderneſs of ſea. Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every ſide environed with huge mountains. Kneller's Hiſtory.

The manifold ſtreams of goodly navigable rivers, as ſo many chains, environed the ſame ſite and temple. Bacon.

Within the environing rocks ſtood the city. Sand.
Thought following thought, and ſtep by ſtep led on,

He enter'd now the bordering deſart wild.
And with dark ſhades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditation thus purſu'd. Milt. Par. Reg.
God hath ſcattered ſeveral degrees of pleaſure and pain in all the things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almoſt all our thoughts. Locke.

2. To involve; to envelope.
May never glorious ſun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkneſs and the gloomy ſhade of death
Environ you, 'till miſchief and deſpair Drive you to break your necks. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.

Since ſhe muſt go, and I muſt mourn, come,
night,
Environ me with darkneſs whiſt I write. Donne.

3. To ſurround in a hoſtile manner; to beſiege;
to hem in.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environed me, and howl'd in mine ears. Shakespeare.

In thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer. Shakespeare.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty,
When ſtraight a barbarous noiſe environs me. Milt.

4. To incloſe; to inveſt.
The ſoldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horror all environ. Cleaveland.

ENVIRONS. n. f. [from environs, French.] The neighbourhood, or neighbouring places round about the country.

To ENUMERATE. v. a. [from enumero, Latin.] To reckon up ſingly; to count over diſtinctly; to ſlumber.

You muſt not only acknowledge to God that you are a ſinner, but muſt particularly enumerate
the kinds of ſin whereof you know yourſelf guilty.
Wake's Preparation for Death.

Befides enumerating the groſs defect of duty to the queen, I ſhew how all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERATION. n. f. [from enumeratio, Latin.] The act of numbering or counting over; number told out.

Whoſoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties, muſt conclude, that well nigh the buſineſs of Chriſtianity is laid out in charity. Spratt's Sermons.

The chemiſts make ſpirit, ſalt, ſulphur, water, and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements. Watts's Logick.

To ENUNCIATE. v. a. [from enuncio, Lat.] To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to expreſs.

ENUNCIATION. n. f. [from enunciatio, Lat.]
1. Declaration; public attestation; open proclamation.

Preaching is to ſtrangers and infants in Chriſt, to produce faith; but this ſacramental enunciation is the declaration and confeſſion of it by men in Chriſt, declaring it to be done, and owned, and accepted, and prevailing. Taylor.

2. Intelligence; information.
It remembers and retains ſuch things as were never at all in the ſenſe; as the conceptions, enun- ciations and actions of the intellect and will. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Expreſſion.
ENUNCIATIVE. adj. [from enunciative.] Declarative; expreſſive.

To ENVY. v. a. [from envier, French; invidere, Lat.]
1. To hate another for excellence, happineſs, or ſucceſs.

Envy thou not the oppreſſor, and chuſe none of his ways. Proverbs iii. 31.
A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty. Collier of Envy.

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.

I have ſeen the fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour. Shakespeare.

You cannot envy your neighbour's wiſdom, if he gives you good counſel; nor his riches, if he ſupplies you in your wants; nor his greatneſs, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.

3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withhold maliciously.

Johnſon, who by ſtudying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, ſeemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

To ENVY. v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the fight of excellence or felicity: with at.

In ſeeking tales and informations
Againſt this man, whoſe honeſty the devil
And his diſciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.

He that loves God is not diſpleaſed at accidents which God chuſes, nor envies at thoſe gifts he be-ſtows. Taylor.

Who would envy at the proſperity of the wicked, and the ſucceſs of perſecutors?
Taylor's Rule of living Holy.

ENVY. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the fight of excellence or happineſs.

Envy is a repining at the proſperity or good of another, or anger and diſpleaſure at any good of another which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray on the Creation.

Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a ſlave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave. Pope.

2. It is uſed ſometimes with of.
All the conſpirators, ſave only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæſar. Shakespeare.

3. Sometimes with to.
Many ſuffered death merely in envy to their virtues and ſuperior genius. Swift.

4. Rivalry; competition.
You may ſee the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another. Dryden on Dramatick Poſy.

5. Malice; malignity.
Madam, this is a meer diſtraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shakespeare.

6. Public odium; ill repute; invidiouſneſs.
Edward Plantagenet ſhould be ſhew'd unto the people; to diſcharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon.

To ENWHEEL. v. a. [from wheel.] To encompaſs; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakespeare.

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n,
Before, behind thee, and on ev'ry hand
Enwheel thee round. Shakespeare's Othello.

To ENWOMB. v. a. [from womb.]
1. To make pregnant.

Me then he left enwomb'd of this child,
This luckleſs child, whom thus ye ſee with blood. Spenser.

I'm your mother;
And put you in the catalogue of thoſe
That were enwomb'd mine. Shakespeare.

2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.
Or, as the Africk niger ſtream enwombs
Itſelf into the earth, and after comes,
Having firſt made a natural bridge to paſs,
For many leagues, far greater than it was;
May't not be ſaid, that her grave ſhall reſtore
Her greater, purer, finer than before? Donne.

EOLIPILE. n. f. [from Eolus and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe; which ball, filled with water, and expoſed to the fire, ſends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blaſts of cold wind through the pipe. Con-

EPH

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, and the waters lying round under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an ephod, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarefies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet's Theory of the Earth

ΕΡΑ'CT. n. f. [ἔρακτις.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year; and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 minutes 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days; but 30 being an entire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact; and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by three; for each one left add ten; Thirty reject: the prime makes epact then. Harris.
As the cycle of the moon serves to shew the epact, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along 'till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532d year. Holder on Time.

ΕΡΑ'ULMENT. n. f. [French, from epaule, a shoulder.] In fortification, a sidework made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth. It sometimes denotes a semibastion and a square orillon, or mass of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a cazemate. Harris.

ΕΡΗ'ΜΕΡΙΣ. n. f. [ἑρημερις.]
1. A journal; an account of daily transactions.
2. An account of the daily motions and situations of the planets.

When casting up his eyes against the light, Both month, and day, and hour, he measur'd right; And told more truly than the ephemeris; For art may err, but nature cannot miss. Dryden's Nun's Tale.

ΕΡΗ'ΜΕΡΙΣΤ. n. f. [from ephemeris.] One who consults the planets; one who studies or practises astrology.

The night before, he was discoursing of and fighting the art of foolish astrologers; and genethical ephemerists, that pry into the horoscope of nativities. Howell.

ΕΡΗΜΕΡΟΝ-ΥΟΜ. n. f. [from ἑρημερον and worm.] A sort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammerdam observes of the ephemeron-worms, that their food is clay, and that they make their cells of the same. Derham.

Ε'PHOD. n. f. [פְּהוֹד.] A sort of ornament worn by the Hebrew priests. That worn by the high priest was richly composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton; and upon the part which came over his two shoulders, were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names. Where the ephod crossed the high priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the breast-plate; in which twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. The ephods worn by the other priests were of plain linen. Calmet.

He made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen. Exod. xxxix. 2.

Array'd in ephods; nor so few As are those pearls of morning dew,

Which hang on herbs and flowers. Sandys.

ΕΠΙ'DEMICAL. } adj. [ἐπιδημικός.]

ΕΠΙ'DEMICK. } 1. That which falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemic disease, but to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons. Bacon's Henry VII.

EPI

As the proportion of acute and epidemic diseases shews the aptness of the air to sudden and vehement impressions, the chronical diseases shew the ordinary temper of the place. Graunt.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemic and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are those who shine as exceptions. South.

He ought to have been busied in losing his money, or in other amusements equally laudable and epidemic among persons of honour. Swift.

3. General; universal. Not used, nor proper. They're citizens of th' world, they're all in all; Scotland's a nation epidemic. Cleveland.

I writ

An epigram that boasts more truth than wit. Gay.

ΕΠΙ'GRAMMA'TICAL. } adj. [epigrammaticus, La-ΕΠΙ'GRAMMA'TICK. } tin.]

1. Dealing in epigrams; writing epigrams. Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous foreboding to lie in names. Camden.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams. He is every where above conceits of epigrammatic wit and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately, without ambition. Addison.

He has none of those little points and puerilities that are so often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatic turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those mixt embellishments of Tasso. Addison.

ΕΠΙ'GRAMMATIST. n. f. [from epigram.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jest upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epigrammatist for its father, and been afterwards gravely understood by some painful collector. Pope.

Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial meets withal, one who, after he had walked through the fairest street twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden dish. Peacham.

ΕΠΙ'GRAPHÉ. n. f. [ἐπιγραφή.] An inscription on a statue. DiA.

Ε'PILEPSY. n. f. [ἐπιληψία.] A convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or of some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any part with so great violence, that the mind cannot restrain them. Quincy.

My lord is fell into an epilepsy: This is the second fit. Shakespeare's Othello.

Melancholy distempers are deduced from spirits drawn from that cacochymia; the phrenitis from cholerick spirits, and the epilepsy from tumes. Floyer on the Humours.

ΕΠΙ'LEPTICK. adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; diseased with an epilepsy.

A plague upon your epileptick visage! Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool? Shakespeare.

Epilepticks ought to breathe a pure air, unaffected with any steams, even such as are very fragrant. Arbutnot on Diet.

Ε'PILOGUE. n. f. [epilogus, Latin.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues.

4 D 2

Shakespeare's As you like it.

Are you mad, you dog?

I am to rise and speak the epilogue.

Dryden's Tyrant. Love.

EPINYCTIS. n. f. [ἐπινύκτις.] A fore at the corner of the eye.

The epinyctis is of the bigness of a lupin, of a dusky red, and sometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain.

Wiseman's Surgery.

EPIPHANY. n. f. [ἐπιφάνεια.] A church festival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Christmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifested to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing star, which conducted the magi to the place where he was.

Di2.

EPIPHONEMA. n. f. [ἐπιφώνημα.] An exclamation; a conclusive sentence not closely connected with the words foregoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. If those preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance and the other asleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the idles; who, if they be sincere, may probably groan at the found.

Swift.

EPITHORA. n. f. [ἐπιθώρα.] An inflammation of any part, but more especially a defluxion of humours on the eyes.

Harris.

EPIPHYLLOSPERMOS. adj. [from ἐπὶ, ἐπὶ and σπέρμα.] Is applied to plants that bear their seed on the back part of their leaves.

Harris.

EPIPHYSIS. n. f. [ἐπιφύσις.] Accretion; the part added by accretion; one bone growing to another by simple contiguity, without any proper articulation.

Quincy.

The epiphysis of the os femoris is a distinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite.

Wiseman.

EPITROCE. n. f. [ἐπιτροχή.] A figure of rhetoric, by which one aggravation, or striking circumstance, is added in due gradation to another; as, he not only spared his enemies, but continued them in employment; not only continued, but advanced them.

EPISCOPACY. n. f. [ἐπισκοπία, Latin.] The government of bishops, the government of the church established by the apostles.

The bishops durst not contest with the assembly in jurisdiction; so that there was little more than the name of episcopacy preserved.

Clarendon.

Prelate itself cannot be proved by prescription, since episcopacy is not prescribed by any time whatsoever.

Ayliffe.

EPISCOPAL. adj. [from episcopus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a bishop.

The plot of discipline fought to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away episcopal jurisdiction.

Hooker.

2. Vested in a bishop.

The apostle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himself, but to use his episcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men.

Rogers.

EPISCOPATE. n. f. [ἐπισκοπία, Latin.] A bishoprick; the office and dignity of a bishop.

EPISODE. n. f. [ἐπίσῳδον.] An incidental narrative, or digression in a poem, separable from the main subject, yet rising naturally from it.

The poem hath no other episodes than such as naturally arise from the subject.

Addis. Spectator.

EPISODICAL. adj. [from episode.] Contained in an episode; pertaining to an episode.

Episodical ornaments, such as descriptions and narrations, were delivered to us from the observations of Aristotle.

Dryden.

I discover the difference between the episodical and principal action, as well as the nature of episodes.

Notes on the Odyssey.

EPISPASTICK. n. f. [ἐπισπαστικόν.]

1. Drawing.

2. Blistering. This is now the more frequent, though less proper sense.

The matter ought to be solicited to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, epispasticks, and blisterings.

Arbutnot.

EPISTLE. n. f. [ἐπιστολή.] A letter. This word is seldom used but in poetry, or on occasions of dignity and solemnity.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes, She half consents, who silently denies.

Dryden.

EPISTOLARY. adj. [from epistle.]

1. Relating to letters; suitable to letters.

2. Transacted by letters.

I shall carry on an epistolary correspondence between the two heads.

Addison.

EPISTLER. n. f. [from epistle.] A scribbler of letters.

EPITAPH. n. f. [ἐπίταφος.] An inscription upon a tomb.

Live still, and write mine epitaph.

Shakespeare.

Some thy lov'd dust in Parian stones enshrine, Others immortal epitaphs design;

With wit and strength, that only yields to thine.

Smith.

EPITHALAMIUM. n. f. [ἐπιθάλμιον.] A nuptial song; a compliment upon marriage.

I presume to invite you to these sacred nuptials: the epithalamium sung by a crowned muse.

Sandy's Paraphrase.

The forty-fifth psalm is an epithalamium to Christ and the church, or to the lamb and his spouse.

Burnet.

EPITHEM. n. f. [ἐπιθήμα.] A liquid medicament externally applied.

Epithems, or cordial applications, are justly applied unto the left breast.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Cordials and epithems are also necessary, to resist the putrefaction and strengthen the vitals.

Wiseman.

EPITHET. n. f. [ἐπίθετον.]

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the verdant grove, the craggy mountain's lofty head.

I affirm with phlegm, leaving the epithets of false, scandalous, and villainous to the author.

Swift.

2. It is used by some writers improperly for title, name.

The epithet of shades belonged more properly to the darkness than the refreshment.

Decay of Piety.

3. It is used improperly for phrase, expression.

For which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?—Suffer love! a good epithet: I do suffer love indeed; for I love thee against my will.

Shakespeare.

EPITOME. n. f. [ἐπιτομή.] Abridgment: ab-breviature; compendious abstract; compendium.

This a poor epitome of your's,

Which, by th' interpretation of full time, May shew like all yourself.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private use; but set forth for public monuments, accuse the industrious writers of delivering much impertinency.

Wotton.

It would be well, if there was a short and plain epitome made, containing the most material heads.

Locke.

Such abstracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places.

To EPITOMISE. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abstract; to contract into a narrow space.

Who did the whole world's soul contract, and drove

Into the glasses of your eyes; So made such mirrors and such spies,

That they did all to you epitomise.

Donne.

If the ladies take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature.

Addison.

2. Less properly, to diminish by amputation; to curtail.

We have epitomized many particular words, to the detriment of our tongue.

EPITOMISER. n. f. [from epitomise.] An a-

EPITOMIST. n. f. [from epitomise.] A writer of epitomes.

EPOCH. n. f. [ἐποχή.] The time at which a

EPOCH. n. f. [ἐποχή.] new computation is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moses distinctly computes by certain intervals, memorable æras and epochs, or terms of time.

Brown.

These are the practices of the world, since the year sixty; the grand epoch of falsehood, as well as debauchery.

Soutb.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease, No action leave to busy chronicles:

Such whose supine felicity but makes In story chafms, in epochs mistakes.

Dryden.

Their several epochs or beginnings, as from the creation of the world, from the flood, from the first olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages.

Holzer on Time.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epochs marked out to us by the motions observable in it.

Locke.

Time, by necessity compell'd, shall go Through scenes of war, and epochs of woe.

Prior.

EPODE. n. f. [ἐπὶ.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

EPOPEE. n. f. [ἐπὶ.] An epick or heroick poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epopee, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it hath not of its own.

Dryden's Virgil.

EPULAT'ION. n. f. [epulatio, Latin.] Banquet; feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EPULOTICK. n. f. [ἐπὶ.] A cicatrifying medicament.

The ulcer, incarnated with common farcoticks, and the ulcerations about it, were cured by ointment of tuty, and such like epuloticks.

Swift.

EQUABILITY. n. f. [from equable.] Equality to itself; evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies, the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by Wisdom.

Ray.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Asiatics lazy.

Arbutnot on Air.

EQUABLE. adj. [æquabilis, Latin.] Equal to itself; even; uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as elysian fields.

Bentley.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift nor too flow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too flow an acid acrimony.

Arbutnot on Diet.

EQUABLY. adv. [from equable.] Uniformity; in the same tenour; evenly; equally to itself.

If bodies move equally in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common centre, their centrepital forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances.

Cheyne.

EQUAL. adj. [æqualis, Latin.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparison; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them.

Ecclus.

Equal lot

May join us; equal joy, as equal love.

Milton.

Although there were no man to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scots trusted not their own numbers, as equal to fight with the English.

Clarendon.

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears, At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears;

An

An equal temper in his mind he found,
When fortune flatter'd him, and when the frown'd.
Dryden.

Think not of me: perhaps my equal mind
May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me. Smith.
4. In just proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendations equal to your merit. Dryden's Fab. Dedication.
5. Impartial; neutral.

Each to his proper fortune stand or fall;
Equal and unconcern'd I look on all:
Rutilians, Trojans, are the same to me,
And both shall draw the lots their fates decree.
Dryden's Æneid.

6. Indifferent.
They who are not disposed to receive them,
may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me.
Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.
He submitted himself, and swore to all equal conditions. Mac.

8. Being upon the same terms.
They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged also, equal in spoils with themselves. Mac.

E'QUAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. One not inferior or superior to another.
He is enamoured on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her: she is no equal for his birth.
Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

He would make them all equal to the citizens of Rome.
2 Mac. ix. 15.

Those who were once his equals, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superior; and those who were once his superiours, because they look upon him as their equal.

To my dear equal in my native land,
My plighted vow I gave: I his receiv'd:
Each swore with truth; with pleasure each believ'd:
Addison's Spectator.

The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd. Prior.
2. One of the same age.

I profit in the Jews religion above many my equals in mine own nation. Gal. i. 14.

To E'QUAL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To make one thing or person equal to another.

2. To rise to the same state with another person.
I know nobody so like to equal him, even at the age he wrote amongst them, as yourself.
Trumbull to Pope.

3. To be equal to.
One whose all not equals Edward's moiety.
Shakespeare.

4. To recompense fully; to answer in full proportion.
She fought Siccheus through the shady grove,
Who answer'd all her cares, and equal'd all her love.
Dryden.

Nor you, great queen, these offices repent,
Which he will equal, and perhaps augment.
Dryden's Virgil.

To E'QUALISE. v. a. [from equal.]
1. To make even.

To equalise accounts we will allow three hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture. Brown.

2. To be equal to: a sense not used That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is. Digby on Bodies.

Ye lofty beeches, tell the matchless dame,
That if together ye fed all one flame,
It could not equalise the hundredth part
Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart. Wall.

EQUALITY. n. f. [from equal.]
1. Likeness with regard to any quantities compared.

Equality of two domestic powers,
Breeds scrupulous faction. Shakespeare's Anth. and Cleo.

2. The same degree of dignity.
One shall rise,
Of proud ambition; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradise Lost.

According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himself, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependance. Swift.

3. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equability.

Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

E'QUALITY. adv. [from equal.]
1. In the same degree with another person or thing; alike.

To reconcile mens vices to their fears is the aim of all the various schemes and projects of sin, and is equally intended by atheism and immorality. Rogers.

The covetous are equally impatient of their condition, equally tempted with the wages of unrighteousness, as if they were indeed poor. Rogers.

2. Evenly; equably; uniformly.
If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship, sometimes slow, and at others swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does. Locke.

3. Impartiality.
We shall use them,
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakespeare's King Lear.

E'QUALNESS. n. f. [from equal.] Equality.
Let me lament
That our stars unreconcilable should have divided
Our equalness to this. Shakespeare.

EQUANGULAR. adj. [from equus and angulus, Latin.] Consisting of equal angles.

EQUANIMITY. n. f. [æquanimitas, Latin.] Evenness of mind, neither elated nor depressed.

EQUANIMOUS. adj. [æquanimis, Latin.] Even; not dejected; not elated.

EQUATION. n. f. [æquare, Latin.] The investigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of excess and defect, to be applied to the whole.

We are to find out the extremities on both sides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the sun along the Ecliptick; and to frame tables of equation of natural days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or subtraction, as the case shall require. Holder on Time.

By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, it seems that light is propagated in time, spending in its passage from the sun to us about seven minutes of time. Newton's Opticks.

EQUATION. [In algebra.] Is an expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms, but of equal value; as, $3x = 36$. Dict.

EQUATION. [In astronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the sun's apparent motion, and the time that is measured by its real or middle motion; according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjusted. Dict.

EQUATOR. n. f. [æquator, Latin.] The equator on the earth, or equinoctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east and sets due west, which he doth at no other time of the year. Harris.

By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles, neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator. Brown's Vul. Err.

On the other side the equator, there is much land still remaining undiscovered. Ray on the Creation.

Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridgy rise,
Whence many a bursting stream auriferous plays. Thomson.

EQUATORIAL. adj. [from æquator.] Pertaining to the equator; taken at the equator.

The planets have spheroidal figures, and obliquities of their equatorial to their ecliptic plane. Cleyn.

EQUESTRIAN. adj. [equestrus, Latin.]
1. Being on horseback.
An equestrian lady appeared upon the plains. Spez.

2. Skilled in horsemanship.
3. Belonging to the second rank in Rome.

E'QUERRY. n. f. [ecurie, Fr.] Master of the horse.
EQUICUR'AL. } adj. [æquus and crus, Latin.]
EQUICUR'EE. }

1. Having the legs of an equal length.
2. Having the legs of an equal length, and longer than the base; isosceles.

An equisquare triangle goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth. Digby on the Soul.
We successively draw lines from angle to angle, until seven equisquare triangles be described. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EQUIDISTANT. adj. [æquus and distans, Latin.] At the same distance.

The fixt stars are not all placed in the same concave superficies, and equidistant from us, as they seem to be. Ray.

EQUIDISTANTLY. n. f. [from equidistant.] At the same distance.

The liver, seated on the right side, by the subclavian division equidistantly communicates unto either arm. Brown.

EQUIFORMITY. n. f. [æquus and forma, Latin.] Uniform equality.

No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity of motion. Brown's Vulg. Err.

EQUILATERAL. adj. [æquus and latus, Latin.] Having all sides equal.

Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser. Bacon.

Trifling utility appears in the twelve signs of the zodiack and their aspects: why no more aspects than diametrically opposite, and such as make equilateral figures? Bentley.

To EQUILIBRATE. v. a. [from equilibrium.] To balance equally; to keep even with equal weight on each side.

If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadstone, have in this affrication been drawn from the equator of the loadstone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an equilibrated magnetick needle. Boyle's Experiments.

The bodies of fishes are equilibrated with the water in which they swim. Arbutnot on Air.

EQUILIBRATION. n. f. [from equilibrate.] Equipoise; the act of keeping the balance even.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In so great a variety of motions, as running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are observed. Derham.

EQUILIBRIUM. n. f. [Latin.]
1. Equipoise; equality of weight.

2. Equality of evidence, motives, or powers of any kind.

Things are not left to an equilibrium, to hover under an indifference whether they shall come to pass, or not come to pass. South.

It is in equilibrium
If deities descend or no;
Then let the affirmative prevail,
As requisite to form my tale. Prior.

Health consists in the equilibrium between those two powers, when the fluids move so equally that they don't press upon the solids with a greater force than they can bear. Arbutnot.

EQUINECESSARY. adj. [æquus and necessarius, Latin.] Needful in the same degree.

For both to give blows and to carry,
In fights, are equinecessary. Hudibras.

EQUINOCTIAL. n. f. [æquus and nox, Latin.] The line that encompasses the world at an equal distance from either pole, to which circle when the sun comes, he makes equal days and nights all over the globe; the same with equator.

EQUINOCTIAL.

EQU

EQUINOCTIAL. adj. [from equinox.]

1. Pertaining to the equinox.

Thrice th' equinoctial line

He circled; four times cross'd the car of night
From pole to pole, traversing each colure.

Milton.

Some say the sun

Was bid turn reins from th' equinoctial road,
Like distant breadth.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Happening about the time of the equinoxes.

3. Being near the equinoctial line; having the properties of things near the equator.

In vain they covet shades and Thracia's gales,
Pining with equinoctial heat.

Philips.

EQUINOCTIALLY. adv. [from equinoctial.] In the direction of the equinoctial.

They may be refrigerated inclanately, or somewhat equinoctially; that is, towards the eastern and western points.

Brown.

EQUINOX. n. f. [æquus and nox, Latin.]

1. Equinoxes are the precise times in which the sun enters into the first point of Aries and Libra; for then, moving exactly under the equinoctial, he make our days and nights equal. This he doth twice a year, about the 21st of March and 23d of September, which therefore are called the vernal and autumnal equinoxes.

Harris.

It ariseth not heliacally about the autumnal equinox,

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The time when this kid was taken out of the womb, was about the vernal equinox.

Ray on the Creation.

'Twas now the month in which the world began,
If March beheld the first created man;
And since the vernal equinox, the sun

In Aries twelve degrees or more had run.

Dryden.

2. Equality; even measure. Improper.

Do but see his vice;

'Tis to his virtues a just equinox,
The one as long as th' other.

Shakespeare's Othello.

3. Equinoctial wind: a poetical use.

The passage yet was good; the wind, 'tis true,
Was somewhat high, but that was nothing new,
No more than usual equinoxes blew.

Dryden.

EQUINUMERANT. adj. [æquus and numerus, Latin.] Having the same number; consisting of the same number.

This talent of gold, though not equinumerant, nor yet equiponderant, as to any other; yet was equivalent to some correspondent talent in brags.

Arbutnot on Coins.

TO EQUIP. v. a. [equipper, French.]

1. To furnish for a horseman or cavalier.

2. To furnish, to accoutre; to dress out.

The country are led astray in following the town; and equipped in a ridiculous habit, when they fancy themselves in the height of the mode.

Addison's Spectator.

EQUIPAGE. n. f. [equipage, French.]

1. Furniture for a horseman.

2. Carriage of state; vehicle.

Winged spirits, and chariots wing'd,
From th' armory of God; where stand of old Myriads, between brazen mountains lodg'd
Against a solemn day, harness'd at hand,
Celestial equipage!

Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Attendance; retinue.

Soon as thy dreadful trumpet begins to found,
The god of war, with his fierce equipage,
Thou do'st awake, sleep never he to found.

Fairy Queen.

I will not lend thee a penny.—

I will retort the sum in equipage.

Shakespeare.

Think what an equipage thou hast in air,
And view with scorn two pages and a chair.

Pope

4. Accoutrements; furniture.

EQUIPAGE. adj. [from equipage.] Accoutered; attended; having fine habits; having splendid retinue.

She forth issued with a goodly train
Of squires and ladies, equipped well,
And entertained them right fairly, as befell.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

EQUIPENDENCY. n. f. [æquus and pendeo, Latin.]

The act of hanging in equipoise; not determined either way.

EQU

The will of man, in the state of innocence, had an entire freedom, a perfect equipendency and indifference to either part of the contradiction, to stand or not to stand.

South.

EQUIPMENT. n. f. [from equip.]

1. The act of equipping or accoutring.

2. Accoutrement; equipage.

EQUIPOISE. n. f. [æquus and pois, French.]

Equality of weight; equilibration; equality of force.

In the temperate zone of our life there are few bodies at such an equipoise of humours; but that the prevalence of some one indisposeth the spirits.

Glanville's Sceptis.

EQUIPOLENCE. n. f. [æquus and pollentia,
Latin.] Equality of force or power.

EQUIPOLLENT. adj. [æquipollens, Lat.] Having equal power or force; equivalent.

Votary resolution is made æquipollent to custom,
even in matter of blood.

Bacon's Essays.

EQUIPONDERANCE. n. f. [æquus and pondus,
Latin.] Equality of weight; equipoise.

Di&.

EQUIPONDERANT. adj. [æquus and ponderans,
Latin.] Being of the same weight.

Their lungs may serve to render their bodies equiponderant to the water.

Ray on the Creation.

A column of air, of any given diameter, is equiponderant to a column of quicksilver of between twenty-nine and thirty inches height.

Locke.

TO EQUIPONDERATE. v. n. [æquus and pondero, Latin.] To weigh equal to any thing.

ing of the substance and nature of copper.

Copperas is a rough and acrimoneous kind of salt, drawn out of ferreous and eruginous earths, partaking chiefly of iron and copper; the blue of copper, the green of iron. Brown.

Agues depend upon a corrupt incinerated melancholy, or upon an adust stibial or eruginous fulphur. Harvey.

ERUPTION. n. f. [eruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking or bursting forth from any confinement.

Finding themselves pent in by the exterior earth, they pressed with violence against that arch, to make it yield and give way to their dilation and eruption. Burnet's Theory.

2. Burst; emission; something forcing itself out suddenly.

In part of Media there are eruptions of flames out of plains. Bacon's Natural History.

Upon a signal given the eruption began; fire and smoke, mixed with several unusual prodigies and figures, made their appearance. Addison's Guard.

3. Sudden excurion of an hostile kind.

Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
Our first eruption, thither or elsewhere;
For this infernal pit shall never hold Celestial spirits in bondage.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work;
Left he, incens'd at such eruption bold,
Destruction with creation might have mix'd.
Milton.

4. Violent exclamation.

To his secretary, whom he laid in a pallet near him for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would, in the absence of all other ears and eyes, break out into bitter and passionate eruptions.
Wotton's Life of Buckingham.

It did not run out in voice or indecent eruptions, but filled the soul, as God the universe, silently and without noise. South.

5. Effluence; pustules.

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth
In strange eruptions. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

An eruption of humours, in any part, is not cured merely by outward applications, but by alterative medicines. Government of the Tongue.

Unripe fruits are apt to occasion foul eruptions on the skin. Arbutnot on Aliments.

ERUPTIVE. adj. [eruptus, Latin.] Bursting forth.

'Tis listening fear, and dumb amazement all,
When to the startled eye the sudden glance
Appears far south eruptive through the cloud.
Thomson.

ERYNGO. n. f. [eryngion.] A plant.

ERYSIPELAS. n. f. [erysipelas.]

An erysipelas is generated by a hot serum in the blood, and affects the superficies of the skin with a shining pale red, and citron colour, without pulsa-tion or circumscribed tumour, spreading from one place to another. Wifeman's Surgery.

ESCALADE. n. f. [French.] The act of scaling the walls of a fortification.

In Geneva one meets with the ladders, petard, and other utensils, which were made use of in their famous escalade. Addison.

ESCALOP. n. f.

1. A shellfish, whose shell is regularly indented.

The shells of those cockles, escalops, and periwinkles, which have greater gravity, were enclosed in stone. Woodward.

2. An inequality of margin; indenture.

The figure of the leaves is divided into jags and escalops, curiously indented round the edges. Ray.

ESCAPADE. n. f. [French.] Irregular motion of a horse.

He with a graceful pride
While his rider every hand survey'd,
Sprung loose, and flew into an escapade;
Not moving forward, yet with every bound
Pressing, and seeming still to quit his ground.
Dryden.

To ESCAPE. v. a. [echaper, French.]

1. To obtain exemption from; to obtain security from; to fly; to avoid.

Since we cannot escape the pursuit of passions, and perplexity of thoughts, there is no way left but to endeavour all we can either to subdue or divert them. Temple.

Had David died sooner, how much trouble had he escaped, which by living he endured in the rebellion of his son? Wake.

2. To pass unobserved by one.

Men are blinded with ignorance and error:
many things may escape them, in many they may be deceived. Hooker.

'Tis still the same, although their airy shape
All but a quick poetick flight escape. Denham.

The reader finds out those beauties and propriety in thought and writing, which escaped him in the tumult and hurry of representing.

Dryden's Don Sebastian, Pref.

To ESCAPE. v. n. To fly; to get out of danger; to avoid punishment or harm.

Benhadad, the king of Syria, escaped on horse.
Chronicles.

They escaped all safe to land. Acts, xxvii. 44.

Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain: escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed. Gen. xxi. 17.

Whoso pleaseth God shall escape from her, but the sinner shall be taken by her. Ecc. vii. 26.

He might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

To convince us that there was no way to escape
by climbing up to the mountains, he assures us that the highest were all covered.

Woodward's Natural History.

Laws are not executed, men of virtue are disgraced, and murderers escape. Watts's Logic.

ESCAPE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Flight; the act of getting out of danger.

I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest. Psalms, lv. 7.

He enjoyed neither his escape nor his honour long, for he was hewn in pieces. Hayward.

Men of virtue have had extraordinary escapes out of such dangers as have enclosed them, and which have seemed inevitable. Addison's Guardian.

2. Excurion; sally.

We made an escape, not so much to seek our own,

As to be instruments of your safety. Denb. Sophy.

3. [In law.] Violent or privy evasion out of some lawful restraint. For example, if the therist, upon a capias directed unto him, takes a person, and endeavours to carry him to gaol, and he in the way, either by violence or by flight, breaks from him, this is called an escape. Cowel.

4. Excuse; subterfuge; evasion.

St. Paul himself did not despise to remember whatsoever he found agreeable to the word of God among the heathen, that he might take from them all escape by way of ignorance. Raleigh.

5. Sally; flight; irregularity.

Thousand escapes of wit,
Make thee the father of their idle dreams,
And rack thee in their fancies.
Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Loose escapes of love. Milton.

6. Oversight; mistake.

In transcribing there would be less care taken, as the language was less understood, and so the escapes less subject to observation.

Brewer's on Language.

ESCARGATOIRE. n. f. [French.] A nursery of snails.

At the Capuchins I saw escargatoires, which I took the more notice of, because I do not remember to have met with any thing of the same kind in other countries. It is a square place boarded in, and filled with a vast quantity of large snails that are esteemed excellent food, when they are well dressed. Addison.

ESCHALOT. n. f. [French.] Pronounced shallot.

Eschalots are now from France become an English plant, managed after the same manner as garlick; only they are to be set earlier, and taken up as soon as the leaves begin to wither, lest the Winter kills them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ESCHAR. n. f. [escara.] A hard crust or scab made by hot applications.

When issues are made, or bones exposed, the eschar should be cut out immediately.

Sharp's Surgery.

ESCHAROTICK. adj. [from eschar.] Caustick;
having the power to scar or burn the flesh.

ESCHAROTICK. n. f. A caustick application.

An eschar was made by the cathartick, which we thrust off, and continued the use of escharoticks.
Wifeman's Surgery.

Escharoticks applied of ash-ashes, or blistering plaster. Floyer.

ESCHEAT. n. f. [from the French escheoir.]

Any lands, or other profits, that fall to a lord within his manor by forfeiture, or the death of his tenant, dying without heir general or especial.
Escheat is also used sometimes for the place in which the king, or other lord, has escheats of his tenants. Thirdly, escheat is used for a writ, which less where the tenant, having estate of fee-simple in any lands or tenements holden of a superior lord, dies seised, without heir general or especial.

Cowel.

If the king's ordinary courts of justice do not protect the people, if he have no certain revenue or escheats, I cannot say that such a country is conquered.

Davies on Ireland.

To ESCHE'AT. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall to the lord of the manor by forfeiture, or for want of heirs.

In the last general wars there, I knew many good freeholders executed by martial law, whole lands were thereby saved to their heirs, which should have otherwise escheated to her majesty.

Spenser on Ireland.

He would forbear to alienate any of the forfeited escheated lands in Ireland, which should accrue to the crown by reason of this rebellion.

Clarendon.

ESCHE'ATOR. n. f. [from escheat.] An officer that observes the escheats of the king in county whereof he is escheator; and certifies them into the exchequer.

Cowel.

At a Bartholemew fair at London an escheator of the city arrested a clothier, and seized his goods.

Gardner's Remains.

To ESCHE'W. v. a. [eschew, old Fr.] To fly; to avoid; to shun; to decline. A word almost obsolete.

She was like a young fawn, who, coming in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or no to be eschewed.

Sidney.

So let us, with this change of weather view,

Change like our minds, and former lives amend;

The old years sins forepast let us eschew,

And fly the faults with which we did offend.

Spenser.

He who obeys, destruction shall eschew;

A wife man knows, both when and what to do.

Sandys.

Of virtue and vice, men are universally to practise the one, and eschew the other.

Atterbury.

ESCHUTCHESON. n. f. The shield of the family; the picture of the ensigns armorial.

Eschutcheon is a French word, from the Latin scutum, leather; and hence cometh our English word buckler, lepe in the old Saxon signifying leather, and buck or bock a buck or flag; of whose skins, quilted close together with horn or hard wood, the ancient Britons made their shields.

Peacocks.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry, and some remembrance perhaps upon the eschutcheon.

Locke.

We will pass over the eschutcheons of the tribes of Israel, as they are usually described in the maps of Canaan.

Brown.

ESCO'RT. n. f. [escort, French.] Convoy; guard from place to place.

To ESCO'RT. v. a. [escorter, Fr.] To convoy; to guard from place to place.

ESCO'IT. n. f. [French.] A tax paid in boroughs and corporations towards the support of the community, which is called scot and lot.

To ESCO'IT. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay a man's reckoning; to support.

What are they children? Who maintains them? How are they escorted?

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

ESCO'UT. n. f. [escouter, French.] Listeners or spies; persons sent for intelligence. Now scout.

They were well entrenched, having good scouts abroad, and sure watch within.

Hayward.

ESCRITOIR. n. f. [French.] A box with all the implements necessary for writing. Pronounced escrioire.

ESCU'AGE. n. f. [from escu, French, a shield.] Esuage, that is, service of the shield, is either uncertain or certain. Esuage uncertain is likewise two fold: first, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's wars so many days. The days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of the land so holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was so much land as, in those days, was accounted a sufficient living for a knight; and that was six hundred and eighty acres as some think, or eight hundred as others, or 151. per annum. Sir Thomas Smith saith, that centus equitibus is 40l. revenue in free lands. If the land extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord but twenty days. The other kind of this esuage uncertain is called Cattleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a castle. Esuage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services.

Cowel.

ESCU'ENT. adj. [esculentus, Latin.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would fast five days; but the same man used to have continually a great wisp of herbs that he smelled on, and some esculent herbs of strong scent, as garlick.

Bacon.

ESCU'ENT. n. f. Something fit for food.

This cutting off the leaves in plants, where the root is the esculent, as radish and parsnips, it will make the root the greater; and so it will do to the heads of onions; and where the fruit is the esculent, by strengthening the root, it will make the fruit also the greater.

Bacon's Natural History.

ESPA'LIER. n. f. Trees planted and cut so as to join.

Plant your fairest tulips in places of shelter, and under espaliers.

Evelyn's Calendar.

Behold Villario's ten years toil complete, His arbores darken, his espaliers meet.

Pope.

ESPA'RIEN. n. f. [medica, or trifolium, Latin.] A kind of saint-foin. A plant.

Mortimer.

ESPE'CIAL. adj. [specialis, Lat.] Principal; chief.

They had th' especial engines been, to rear His fortunes up.

Daniel's Civil War.

ESPE'CIALLY. adv. [from especial] Principally; chiefly; particularly; in an uncommon degree above any other.

I somewhat marvel, that they especially should think it absurd to oppose church government, a plain matter of action, unto matter of faith, who know that themselves divide the gospel into doctrine and discipline.

Hooker.

Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?

Shakespeare.

This delight children take in doing of mischief, but more especially the pleasure they take to put any thing to pain that is capable of it, I cannot persuade myself to be any other than a foreign and introduced disposition.

Locke.

Providence hath planted in all men a natural desire and curiosity of knowing things to come; and such things especially as concern our particular happiness, or the general fate of mankind.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

ESPER'ANCE. n. f. [French.] Hope. Not used.

To be worst,

Shakespeare.

The lowest, most dejected things of fortune, Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Yet there is a credence in my heart, An esperance so obstinately strong,

Shakespeare.

That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears.

Shakespeare.

ESPI'AL. n. f. [French, from espier.] A spy; scout; one sent to bring intelligence. Not used.

Those four garrisons, issuing forth at such convenient times as they shall have intelligence, or espial upon the enemy, will drive him from one side to another.

Spenser on Ireland.

As he march'd along, By your espials were discovered

Shakespeare.

Two mightier troops.

Shakespeare.

The English in the suburbs close entrench'd, Went through a secret grate.

ESPO'USALS. n. f. without a singular. [spousalia, Latin; spous, French.] The act of contracting or affiancing a man and woman to each other; the act or ceremony of betrothing.

ESPO'USAL. adj. Used in the act of espousing or betrothing.

The ambassador put his leg, stript naked to the knee, between the spousal sheets; that the ceremony might amount to a confirmation.

Bacon's Henry VII.

To ESPO'USE. v. a. [espouser, French.]

1. To contract or betroth to another: with to. Deliver me my wife Michael, which I espoused to me.

2 Samuel.

2 Or with. He had received him as a suppliant, protected him as a person fled for refuge, and espoused him with his kinswoman.

Bacon.

3. To marry; to wed. Lavinia will I make my emperess, And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse.

Shakespeare's Tit. Andr.

With flowers, garlands, and sweet smelling herbs, Espos'd Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

They soon espous'd; for they with ease were join'd,

Who were before contracted in the mind.

Dryden.

If her fire approves, Let him espouse her to the peer she loves.

Pope's Ode.

4. To adopt; to take to himself. In gratitude unto the Duke of Bretagne, for his former favours, he espoused that quarrel, and declared himself in aid of the duke.

Bacon's Henry VII.

5. To maintain; to defend. Their gods did not only interest themselves in the event of wars, but also espoused the several parties in a visible corporeal descent.

Dryden's Juvenal Dedication.

The city, army, court, espouse my cause.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion, and then seek arguments either to make good their beauty, or varnish over their deformity.

Locke.

The righteousness of the best cause may be overbalanced by the iniquities of those that espoused it.

Smalridge.

The cause of religion and goodness, which is the cause of God, is ours by descent, and we are doubly bound to espouse it.

Atterbury.

To ESPY'. v. a. [espier, French.]

1. To see things at a distance. Few there are of so weak capacity but publick evils they easily espy; fewer so patient as not to complain, when the grievous inconveniences thereof work sensible smart.

Hooker.

2. To discover a thing intended to be hid. He who before he was espied was afraid, after being perceived was ashamed, now being hardly rubbed upon, left both fear and shame, and was now moved to anger.

Sidney.

3. To see unexpectedly. As one of them opened his sack, he espied his money.

Genesis.

4. To discover as a spy. Moses sent me to espy out the land, and I brought him word again.

Jos. xiv. 7.

To ESPY'. v. n. To watch; to look out. Stand by the way and espy; ask him that fleeth what is done?

Jer. xlvii. 19.

ESQUI'RE. n. f. [esquier, French.] See SQUIRE.

1. The armour-bearer or attendant on a knight.

2. A title of dignity, and next in degree below a knight. Those to whom this title is now of right due, are all the younger sons of noblemen, and their heirs male for ever; the four esquires of the king's body; the eldest sons of all baronets; so also of all knights of the Bath, and knights bachelor, and their heirs male in the right line; those that serve the king in any worshipsful calling, as the serjeant chirurgion, serjeant of the ewry, master cook, &c. such as are created esquires by the king with a collar of S. S. of silver, as the heralds.

Locke.

valds and serjeants at arms. The chief of some ancient families are likewise esquires by prescription; those that bear any superior office in the commonwealth, as high sheriff of any county, who retains the title of esquire during his life, in respect of the great trust he has had of the posse committatus. He who is a justice of the peace, has it during the time he is in commission, and no longer. Utter barristers, in the acts of parliament for poll-money, were ranked among esquires. Blount.

What, are our English dead?

—Sir Richard Ketley, Davy Gam quire.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

To ESSAY. v. n. [essayer, French.]

1. To attempt; to try; to endeavour.

While I this unexampled task essay,
Pais awful gulphs, and beat my painful way,
Celestial dove, divine assistance bring. Blackmore.

No conquest she, but o'er herself desir'd;

No arts essay'd, but not to be admir'd. Pope.

2. To make experiment of.

3. To try the value and purity of metals.

The standard in our mint being now settled, the rules and methods of essaying suited to it should remain unvariable. Locke.

ESSAY. n. f. [from the verb. The accent is used on either syllable.]

1. Attempt; endeavour.

Fruitless our hopes, though pious our essays;
Yours to preserve a friend, and mind to praise. Smith.

2. A loose fally of the mind; an irregular indigested piece; not a regular and orderly composition.

My essays, of all my other works, have been most current. Bacon.

Yet modestly he does his work survey,
And calls his finish'd poem an essay. Poem to Rose.

3. A trial; an experiment.

This treatise prides itself in no higher a title than that of an essay, or imperfect attempt at a subject. Glanville.

He wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my virtue. Shakespeare.

Repetitions wear us into a liking of what possibly, in the first essay, displeased us. Locke.

4. First taste of any thing; first experiment.

Translating the first of Homer's Iliads, I intended as an essay to the whole work. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

Dryden's Fables, Preface.

ESSENCE. n. f. [essential, Latin.]

1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no: a rose in Winter has an essence; in Summer it has an existence also. Watts's Logick.

One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;
Another, blood diffus'd about the heart;

Another faith, the elements conspire,
And to her essence each doth give a part. Davies.

I could with the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence. More's Divine Dialogues.

He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.

The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of Christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular Christian man. Hooker.

3. Existence; the quality of being.

In such cogitations have I stood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence. Sidney.

4. Being; existent person.

As far as gods, and heav'nly essences
Can perish. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. Species of existent being.

Here be four of you, as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends: as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion, he may be the fifth essence. Bacon.

6. Constituent substance.

For spirits, when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncomposed is their essence pure;
Not ty'd or manacled with joint or limb. Milton.

7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.

She is my essence; and I leave to be,

If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakespeare.

8. [In Medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.

9. Perfume; odour; scent.

Our humble province is to 'tend the fair;
To fave the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

To ESSENCE. v. a. [from essence.] To perfume; to scent.

The husband rails, from morning to night, at Scented fops and tawdry courtiers. Addison's Spect.

ESSENTIAL. adj. [essentialis, Latin.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.

The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Bacon.

From the original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed. Spratt.

This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immaterial and divine power. Bentley.

A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion; but conceals an essential circumstance, upon which the whole weight of the matter turns. Swift.

And if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to th' amazing whole,

The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall. Pope.

2. Important in the highest degree; principal.

Judgment's more essential to a general,
Than courage. Denham's Sophty.

3. Pure; highly rectified; subtilty elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.

The juice of the feed is an essential oil or balm, designed by nature to preserve the seed from corruption. Aschmole.

ESSENTIAL. n. f.

1. Existence; being.

His utmost ire to the height enrag'd,
Will either quite consume us, or reduce

To nothing this essential. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Nature; first or constituent principles.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his essentials. South.

3. The chief point; that which is in any respect of great importance.

ESSENTIALLY. adv. [essentialiter, Latin.] By the constitution of nature; really; according to the true state of things.

He that loves himself,
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,

The name of valour. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Body and spirit are essentially divided, though not locally distant. Glanville.

All sin essentially is, and must be, mortal. South.

Knowledge is that which, next to virtue, truly and essentially raiseth one man above another. Addison's Guardian.

ESSENCE. n. f. [of the Fr. essence, or essence.]

1. He that has his presence forborn or excused upon any just cause; as sickness.

2. Allegement of an excuse for him that is summoned, or fought for, to appear and answer to an action real, or to perform suit to a court baron, upon just cause of absence. Corvel.

3. Excuse; exemption.

From every work he challenged essoin,
For contemplation sake; yet otherwise
His life he led in lawless riotise. Fairy Queen.

To ESTABLISH. v. a. [etablis, French.]

1. To settle firmly; to fix unalterably.

He may establish thee to-day for a people unto himself. Deut.

I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant. Gen. xvii. 19.

The Normans never obtained this kingdom by such a right of conquest, as did or might alter the established laws of the kingdom. Hale's Common Law.

2. To settle in any privilege or possession; to confirm.

Soon after the rebellion broke out, the Presbyterian sect was established in all its forms by an ordinance of the lords and commons. Squiff.

3. To make firm; to raise.

Every vow, and every binding oath to assist the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make it void. Numbers.

4. To fix or settle in an opinion.

So were the churches established in the faith. Acts, xvi. 5.

5. To form or model.

He appointed in what manner his family should be established. Clarendon.

6. To found; to build firmly; to fix immovably. A sense not in use.

For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. Pf. xxiv. 12.

7. To make a settlement of any inheritance. A sense not in use.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

ESTABLISH. n. f. [from establish.] He who establishes.

I reverence the holy fathers as divine establishers of faith. Lord Digby.

ESTABLISHMENT. n. f. [from establish; etablisement, French.]

1. Settlement; fixed state.

All happy peace, and goodly government,
Is settled there in sure establishment. Fairy Queen.

2. Confirmation of something already done; ratification.

He had not the act penned by way of recognition of right; as, on the other side, he avoided to have it by new law; but chose rather a kind of middle way, by way of establishment. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Settled regulation; form; model of a government or family.

Now come into that general reformation, and bring in that establishment by which all men should be contained in duty. Spenser's State of Ireland.

4. Foundation; fundamental principle; settled law.

The sacred order to which you belong, and even the establishment on which it subsists, have often been struck at; but in vain. Atterbury.

5. Allowance; income; salary.

His excellency, who had the sole disposal of the emperor's revenue, might gradually lessen your establishment. Swift.

6. Settled or final rest.

Whilst we set up our hopes and establishment here, we do not seriously consider that God has provided another and better place for us. W. Ake.

The Cyclops hammers fall On Mars his armour, forg'd for proof eternal. Shakespeare.

ETERNITY. n. f. [eternitas, Latin.]

1. Duration without beginning or end.

In this ground his precious root Still lives, which, when weak time shall be pour'd out

Into eternity, and circular joys Dancing an endless round, again shall rise. Crashaw.

Thy immortal rhyme Makes this one short point of time,

To fill up half the orb of round eternity. Cowley.

By repeating the idea of any length of duration which we have in our minds, with the endless addition of number, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.

2. Duration without end.

Beyond is all abyss, Eternity, whose end no eye can reach! Milton.

Eternity, thou pleasing, dreadful thought! Through what variety of untried being,

Through what new scenes and changes must we pass! Addison.

To ETERNIZE. v. a. [eterno, Latin.]

1. To make endless; to perpetuate.

I with two fair gifts Created him endow'd; with happiness, And immortality: that fondly lost,

This other serv'd but to eternize woe. Milton.

2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.

Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings. Sidney.

And well befits all knights of noble name, That covet in th' immortal book of fame

To be eternized, that fame to haunt. Fairy Queen.

I might relate of thousands, and their names eternize here on earth; but those elect

Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n, Seek not the praise of men. Milton's Par. Lost.

The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eternized their fame, and thereby their own. Temple.

Both of them are set on fire by the great actions of heroes, and both endeavour to eternize them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Creech seems to have accented the first syllable.

Hence came its name, in that the grateful Jove Hath eternized the glory of his love. Creech's Manilius.

ETHER. n. f. [ether, Latin; αιθερ.]

1. An element more fine and subtle than air; air refined or sublimed.

If any one should suppose that ether, like our air, may contain particles which endeavour to recede from one another; for I do not know what this ether is; and that its particles are exceedingly smaller than those of air, or even than those of light, the exceeding smallness of its particles may contribute to the greatness of the force by which those particles may recede from one another. Newton's Opticks.

The parts of other bodies are held together by the eternal pressure of the ether, and can have no other conceivable cause of their cohesion and union. Locke.

2. The matter of the highest regions above.

There fields of light and liquid ether flow, Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.

ETHEREAL. adj. [from ether.]

1. Formed of ether.

Man feels me, when I press th' ethereal plains. Dryden.

2. Celestial; heavenly.

Go, heav'nly guest, ethereal messenger, Sent from whose sov'reign goodness I adore. Mil.

Thrones and imperial pow'rs, offspring of Heav'n,

Ethereal virtues! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Such as these, being in good part freed from the entanglements of sense and body, are employed like the spirits above, in contemplating the Divine

Wisdom in the works of nature; a kind of anticipation of the ethereal happiness and employment. Glanville.

Vast chain of being, which from God began, Nature's ethereal, human; angel, man. Pope.

disobliged you; and hath made your flame a better return, by restoring you your own heart.
Boyle's Seraphick Love.

EVER. adv. [æpe, Saxon.]

1. At any time.

Men know by this time, if ever they will know, whether it be good or evil which hath been so long retained. Hooker.

If thou hast that, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever, I mean valour, this might shew it. Shakespeare.

You serve a master who is as free from the envy of friends, as ever any king was.

So few translations deserve praise, that I scarce ever saw any which deserved pardon. Denham.

The most sensual man that ever was in the world, never felt so delicious a pleasure as a clear conscience. Tilston.

By repeating any idea of any length of time, as of a minute, a year, or an age, as often as we will in our own thoughts, and adding them to one another, without ever coming to the end of such addition, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.

2. At all times; always; without end.

God hath had ever, and ever shall have, some church visible upon the earth. Hooker.

I see things may serve long, but not serve ever.

Ever since that time Lifander has been at the house. Tatler.

Immortal Vida! on whose honour'd brow
The poet's bays and critick's ivy grow,
Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame. Pope.

3. For ever. Eternally; to perpetuity.

Men are like a company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers and their sweetnesses; others beetles, delighted with other kinds of viands; which, having enjoyed for a season, they cease to be, and exist no more for ever. Locke.

We'll to the temple: there you'll find your son;
And there be crown'd, or give him up for ever.
A. Phillips.

4. It is sometimes reduplicated.

For ever and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shaksp.
I know a lord who values no leaf, though for a thousand years, nor any estate that is not for ever and ever. Temple.

The meeting points the fatal lock dis sever
From the fair head, for ever and for ever. Pope.

5. At one time, as, ever and anon: that is, at one time and another; now and then.

So long as Guyon with her communed,
Unto the ground the cast her modest eye;
And ever and anon, with rosy red,
The bathful blood her snowy cheeks did dye.
Fairy Queen.

The fat ones would be ever and anon making sport with the lean, and calling them starvelings.
L'Estrange.

He lay stretch'd along,
And ever and anon a silent tear
Stole down and trickled from his hoary beard.
Dryden.

6. In any degree.

the ground or any body else are ever the richer.
Collier on Pride.

It suffices to the unity of any idea, that it be considered as one representation or picture, though made up of ever for many particulars. Locke.

There must be somewhere such a rank as man:
And all the question, wrangle ever so long.

Is only this, If God has plac'd him wrong? Pope.

7. A word of enforcement, or aggravation. As soon as ever he had done it; that is, immediately after he had done it. In this sense it is scarcely used but in familiar language.

That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

They brake all their bones in pieces, or ever they came at the bottom of the den. Dan. iv. 24.

To half the profit, half the fame. Prior.

The title of duke had been funk in the family ever since the attainer of the great duke of Suffolk. Addison on Luck.

8. EVER A. Any: [as every, that is, every each or ever each is each one, all.] This word is still retained in the Scottish dialect.

I am old, I am old.

—I love thee better than I love ever a scurvy young boy of them all. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

9. It is often contracted into ever.

10. It is much used in composition in the sense of always: as, evergreen, green throughout the year; everdure, enduring without end. It is added almost arbitrarily to neutral participles and adjectives, and will be sufficiently explained by the following instances:

EVE

EVERBUBBLING. adj. [ever and bubbling.] Boil- ing up with perpetual murmurs.

Panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That everbubbling spring. Crashaw.

EVERBURNING. adj. [ever and burning.] Unex- tinguished.

His tail was stretched out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it rought;
And with extorted pow'r and borrow'd strength,
The everburning lamps from thence it brought.
Spenser.

Torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With everburning sulphur unconsum'd! Milton.

EVERDURING. adj. [ever and during.] Eternal;
enduring without end.

Our souls, piercing through the impurity of flesh, behold the highest heavens, and thence bring knowledge to contemplate the everduring glory and termless joy. Raleigh.

Heav'n open'd wide
Her everdaring gates, harmonious found!
On golden hinges moving. Milton's Par. Lost.

EVERGREEN. adj. [ever and green.] Verdant throughout the year.

There will I build him
A monument, and plant it round with shade
Of laurel, evergreen, and branching palm. Milton.

lous. Swift.

EVERLASTINGNESS. n. f. [from everlasting.]

Eternity; perpetuity; an indefinite duration.

Nothing could make me sooner to confess,
That this world had an everlastingness,
Than to consider that a year is run,
Since both this lower world's, and the sun's fun,
Did set. Donne.

EVERLIVING. adj. [ever and living.] Living without end; immortal; eternal; incessant.

Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
To that most glorious house, that glist'eth bright
With burning stars and everliving fires?
Fairy Queen.

In that he is man, he received life from the Father, as from the fountain of that everliving Deity.
Hooker.

God's justice in the one, and his goodness in the other,

other, is exercised for evermore, as the everliving subjects of his reward and punishment.

Raleigh's History.

The instinct of brutes and insects can be the effect of nothing else than the wisdom and skill of a powerful everliving agent.

Newton's Opticks.

EVERMORE. adv. [ever and more.] Always; eternally. More seems an expletive accidentally added, unless it signified originally from this time: as, evermore, always henceforward; but this sense has not been strictly preserved.

It govern'd was, and guided evermore,
Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoare.

Fairy Queen.

Sparks by nature evermore aspire,
Which makes them now to such a highness flee.

TO EXCAVATE. v. a. [excavo, Latin.] To hollow; to cut into hollows.

The cups, gilt with a golden border about the brim, were of that wonderful smallness, that Faber put a thousand of them into an excavated pepper-corn.

Though nitrous tempests, and clandestine death, Fill'd the deep caves, and numerous vaults beneath,

Which form'd with art, and wrought with endless toil,

Ran through the faithless excavated soil,

See the unwearied Briton delves his way,

And to the caverns lets in war and day.

Flat thecæ, some like hats, some like buttons, excavated in the middle.

EXCAVATION. n. f. [from excavate.]

1. The act of cutting into hollows.

2. The hollow formed; the cavity.

While our eye measures the eminent and the hollowed parts of pillars, the total object appeareth the bigger; and so, as much as those excavations do substract, is supplied by a fallacy of the sight.

TO EXCEED. v. a. [exceedo, Latin.]

1. To go beyond; to outgo.

Nor did any of the crufts much exceed half an inch in thickness.

2. To excel; to surpass.

The country is supposed to be exceeding rich.

The Genoese were exceeding powerful by sea, and contended often with the Venetians for superiority.

Talk no more so exceeding proudly; let no arrogance come out of your mouth.

The action of the Iliad and that of the Æneid were in themselves exceeding short; but are beautifully extended and diversified by the invention of episodes, and the machinery of the gods.

The serum of the blood affords, by distillation, an exceeding limpid water, neither acid nor alkaline.

EXCEEDINGLY. adv. [from exceeding.] To a great degree; greatly; very much.

They cried out the more exceedingly, crucify him.

Isaac trembled exceedingly.

The earl of Surrey, lieutenant of Ireland, was much feared of the king's enemies, and exceedingly beloved of the king's subjects.

Precious stones look exceedingly well, when they are set in those places which we would make to come out of the picture.

Is not this medium exceedingly more rare and subtle than the air, and exceedingly more elastic and active?

To EXCE/L. v. a. [excello, Lat.] To outgo in good qualities; to surpass.

Venus her myrtle, Phoebus has his bays; Tea both excels, which you vouchsafe to praise.

How heroes rise, how patriots set, Thy father's bloom and death may tell;

Excelling others, these were great;

Thou greater still, must these excel.

To EXCE/L. v. n. To have good qualities in a great degree; to be eminent; to be great.

Then to Silvia let us sing,

That Silvia is excelling.

Reuben, unfable as water, thou shalt not excel.

It is not only in order of nature for him to govern, that is the more intelligent; but there is no less required, courage to protect, and, above all, honesty and probity to abstain from injury: so fitness to govern is a perplexed business. Some men, some nations, excel in the one ability, some in the other.

Company are to be avoided that are good for nothing; those to be fought and frequented that excel in some quality or other.

He match'd their beauties where they most excel;

Of love sung better, and of arms as well.

Let those teach others, who themselves excel;

And censure freely, who have written well.

EXCELLENCE. n. f. [excellence, Fr. excellentia, EXCELLENCY. n. f. Lat.]

1. The state of abounding in any good quality.

2. Dignity; high rank in existence.

Is it not wonderful, that base desires should so extinguish in men the sense of their own excellency, as to make them willing that their souls should be like the souls of beasts, mortal and corruptible with their bodies?

I know not why a fiend may not deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, but yet a creature.

3. The state of excelling in any thing.

I have, amongst men of parts and business, seldom heard any one commended for having an excellency in music.

4. That in which one excels.

The criticisms have been made rather to discover beauties and excellencies than their faults and imperfections.

5. Purity; goodness.

She loves him with that excellence,

That angels love good men with.

6. A title of honour.

It is now usually applied to generals of an army, ambassadors, and governors.

They humbly shew unto your excellence,

To have a goodly peace concluded of.

3. Well; in a high degree.

He determines that man was erect, because he was made with hands, as he excellently declareth.

That was excellently observed, says I, when I read a passage in an author, where his opinion agrees with mine.

2. To an eminent degree.

Comedy is both excellently instructive and extremely pleasant; satire lashes vice into reformation; and humour represents folly, so as to render it ridiculous.

To EXCE/PT. v. a. [excipio, Latin.]

1. To leave out, and specify as left out of a general precept, or position.

But when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest, that he is excepted which did put all things under him.

Adam, behold

Th' effects, which thy original crime hath wrought

In some to spring from thee, who never touch'd

Th' excepted tree.

To EXCE/PT. v. n. To object; to make objections.

A succession which our author could not except against.

EXCE/PT. preposit. [from the verb. This word, long taken as a preposition or conjunction, is originally the participle passive of the verb; which, like most others, had for its participle two terminations, except or excepted. All except one, is all, one excepted. Except may likewise be, according to the Teutonic idiom, the imperative mood: all, except one; that is, all but one, which you must except.]

1. Exclusively of; without inclusion of.

Richard except, those whom we fight against,

Had rather have us win than him they follow.

God and his son except,

Nought valued he nor fear'd.

2. Unless; if it be not so that.

It is necessary to know our duty, because it is necessary for us to do it: and it is impossible to do it, except we know it.

EXCE/PTING. preposit. [from except. See EXCEPT.] Without inclusion of; with exception of. An improper word.

May I not live without controul and awe,

Excepting still the letter of the law?

People come into the world in Turkey the same way they do here; and yet, excepting the royal family, they get but little by it.

EXCEPTION. n. f. [from except; exceptio, Lat.]

1. Exclusion from the things comprehended in a precept, or position; exclusion of any person from a general law.

When God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures to Noah and his family, we find no exception at all; but that Cham stood as fully invested with this right as any of his brethren.

Let the money be raised on land, with an exception to some of the more barren parts, that might be tax-free.

2. It should have from before the rule or law to which the exception refers; but it is sometimes inaccurately used with to.

Pleas, in exception to all general rules,

Your taste of follies, with our scorn of fools.

3. Thing excepted or specified in exception.

Every act of parliament was not previous to what it enacted: unless those two, by which the earl of Stafford and sir John Fenwick lost their heads may pass for exceptions.

Who first taught souls enslav'd, and realms undone,

Th' enormous faith of many made for one;

That proud exception to all nature's laws,

T' invert the world and counterwork its cause.

4. Objection; cavil: with against or to.

Your assertion hath drawn us to make search whether these be just exceptions against the customs of our church, when ye plead that they are the same which the church of Rome hath, or that they are not the same which some other reformed churches have devised.

He may have exceptions peremptory against the jurors, of which he then shall shew cause.

Revelations will soon be discerned to be extremely conducive to reforming mens lives, such as will answer all objections and exceptions of flesh and blood against it.

I will answer what exceptions they can have against our account, and confute all the reasons and explications they can give of their own.

5. Peevish dislike; offence taken: sometimes with to.

I fear'd to shew my father Julia's letter,

Left he should take exceptions to my love.

6. Sometimes with at.

He first took exception at this badge,

Pronouncing, that the paleness of this flow'r

Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart.

7. Sometimes with against.

Roderigo, thou hast taken against me an exception; but I protest I have dealt most directly in thy affair.

8. In this sense it is commonly used with the verb take.

He gave sir James Tirrel great thanks; but took exception to the place of their burial, being too base for them that were king's children.

EXCEPTIONABLE. adj. [from exception.] Liable to objection.

The only piece of pleantry in Milton is where the evil spirits rally the angels upon the success of their artillery: this passage I look upon to be the most exceptionable in the whole poem.

EXCEPTIONOUS. adj. [from except.] Peevish; forward; full of objections; quarrelsome.

They are so supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptionous, that they are not only short of the true character of friendship, but become the very foes of society.

EXCEPTIVE. adj. [from except.] Including an exception.

Exceptive propositions will make complex syllogisms, as none but physicians came to the consultation: the nurse is no physician, therefore the nurse came not to the consultation.

EXCEPTLESS. adj. [from except.] Omitting or neglecting all exception; general; universal. This is not in use.

Forgive my gen'ral and exceptless rashness,

Perpetual sober gods! I do proclaim

One honest man.

EXCEPTOR. n. f. [from except.] Objector; one that makes exceptions.

The exceptor makes a reflection upon the impropriety of those expressions.

To EXCE/RN. v. a. [excerno, Lat.] To strain out; to separate or emit by strainers; to send out by excretion.

That which is dead, or corrupted, or exorned, hath antipathy with the same thing when it is alive and sound, and with those parts which do exorn.

Exercise first fendeth nourishment into the parts; and secondly, helpeth to exorn by sweat, and so maketh the parts assimilate.

An unguent or pap prepared with an open vessel to exorn it into.

EXCEPTION. n. f. [exceptio, Latin.]

1. The act of gleanings; selecting.
2. The thing gleaned or selected.
Times have consumed his works, saving some few exceptions. Raleigh.

EXCESS. n. f. [excessus, Latin.]

1. More than enough; faulty superfluity.
Amongst the heaps of these excesses and superfluities, there is espied the want of a principal part of duty. Hosker.

Goodness answers to the theological virtue charity, and admits no excess but error: the desire of power in excess caused the angels to fall; the desire of knowledge in excess caused man to fall; but in charity there is no excess, neither can angel or man come in danger by it. Bacon's Essays.

Members are crooked or distorted, or disproportionate to the rest, either in excess or defect. Ray on the Creation.

2. Exuberance; state of exceeding; comparative exuberance.

Let the superfluous and lust dieted man, That braves your ordinance, feel your power quickly;

So distribution shall undo excess, And each man have enough.

Shakespeare's King Lear.
The several rays in that white light retain their colorist qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do by their excess and predominance cause their proper colour to appear. Newton's Opticks.

3. Intemperance; unreasonable indulgence in meat and drink.

It was excess of wine that set him on, And on his more advice we pardon him. Shakespeare.

There will be need of temperance in diet; for the body, once heavy with excess and surfeits, hangs plummets on the nobler parts.

Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

4. Violence of passion.

5. Transgression of due limits.
A popular sway, by forcing kings to give More than was fit for objects to receive, Ran to the same extremes; and one excess Made both, by striving to be greater, less. Denham.

Hospitality sometimes degenerates into profuseness: even parsimony itself, which fits but ill upon a publick figure, is yet the more pardonable excess of the two. Atterbury.

EXCESSIVE. adv. [excessivus, French; from excess.]

1. Beyond the common proportion of quantity or bulk.

If panic be laid below and about the bottom of a root, it will cause the root to grow to an excessive bigness. Bacon.

2. Vehement beyond measure in kindness or dislike.

Be not excessive towards any. Ecclesi.

The people's property it is, by excessive favour, to bring great men to misery, and then to be excessive in pity. Hayward.

EXCESSIVELY. adv. [from excessive.] Exceedingly; eminently; in a great degree.

A man must be excessively stupid, as well as uncharitable, who believes there is no virtue but on his own side. Adison.

TO EXCHANGE. v. a. [exchange, French; exchanger, low Latin.]

1. To give or quit one thing for the sake of gaining another.

They shall not sell of it, neither exchange nor alienate the first fruits. Exek. xlviii. 14.

or dissects them. Brown.

EXENTERATION. n. f. [exenteratio, Lat.] The act of taking out the bowels; embowelling.

Belonius not only affirms that chameleons feed on flies, caterpillars, beetles, and other insects; but upon exenteration he found these animals in their bellies. Brown.

EXEQUIAL. adj. [from exequie, Latin.] Funeral; relating to funerals. Dict.

EXEQUIES. n. f. without a singular [exequie, Latin.] Funeral rites; the ceremony of burial;
the procession of burial. For this word obseques is often used, but not so properly.

Let's not forget
The noble duke of Bedford late deceas'd
But see his exequies fulfill'd in Roan. Shakespeare.

The tragical end of the two brothers, whose exequies the next successor had leisure to perform.
Dryden.

EXERCENT. adj. [exercens, Latin.] Practising;
following any calling or vocation.

The judge may oblige every exercens advocate to give his patronage and assistance unto a litigant in distress for want of an advocate. Ayliff's Paragon.

EXERCISE. n. f. [exercetum, Latin.]
1. Labour of the body; labour considered as conducive to the cure or prevention of diseases.

Men ought to beware that they use not exercise and a spare diet both; but if much exercise, a plentiful diet; if sparing diet, little exercise.
Bacon's Natural History.

The wife for cure on exercise depend:
God never made his work for man to mend. Dryden.

He is exact in prescribing the exercises of his patients, ordering some of them to walk eighty stadia in a day, which is about nine English miles.
A. butnot on Crins.

The purest exercise of health,
The kind refresher of the Summer heats. Thomson.

2. Something done for amusement.
As a watchful king, he would not neglect safety, thin'g nevertheless to perform all things rather as an exercise than as a labour.
Bacon's Henry VI.

3. Habitual action by which the body is formed to gracefulness, vigour, and gentleness.
He was strong of body, and so much the stronger as he, by a well-disciplined exercise, taught it both to do and to suffer. Sidney.

The French apply themselves more universally to their exercises than any nation; one seldom sees a young gentleman that does not fence, dance, and ride. Addison.

4. Preparatory practice in order to skill: as,
the exercise of soldiers.

5. Use, actual application of any thing.

The sceptre of spiritual regimen over us in this present world, is it at the length to be yielded up into the hands of the Father which gave it; that is, the use and exercise thereof shall cease, there being no longer on earth any militant church to govern. Hooker.

6. Practice; outward performance.
Lewis refused even those of the church of England, who followed their matter to St. Germain's, the public exercise of their religion. Addison on Italy.

7. Employment frequently repeated.
The learning of the situation and boundaries of kingdoms, being only an exercise of the eyes and memory, a child with pleasure will learn them.
Locke.

Children, by the exercise of their senses about objects that affect them in the womb, receive some few ideas before they are born. Locke.

Exercise is very alluring and entertaining to the understanding, while its reasoning powers are employed without labour. Watts.

8. Task; that which one is appointed to perform.

Patience is more oft the exercise
Of saints, the trial of their fortitude
Making them each his own deliverer,
And victor over all
That tyranny or fortune can inflict.
Milton's Agonists.

9. Act of divine worship, whether publick or private.
Good sir John
I'm in your debt for your last exercise;
Come the next Sabbath, and I will content
you. Shakespeare.

To EXERCISE. v. a. [exercito, Latin.]

1. To employ; to engage in employment.
This faculty of the mind, when it is exercised immediately about things, is called judgement.
Locke.

2. To train by use to any act.
The Roman tongue was the study of their youth: it was their own language they were instructed and exercised in. Locke.

3. To make skilful or dexterous by practice;
to habituate.
Strong meat belongeth to them who, by reason of use, have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil. Hebr.

Reason, by its own penetration, where it is strong and exercised, usually fees quicker and clearer without syllogism. Locke.

And now the goddess, exercised in ill,
Who watch'd an hour to work her impious will,
Ascends the roof. Dryden's Æn.

4. To busy; to keep busy.
He will exercise himself with pleasure, and without weariness, in that godlike employment of doing good. Atterbury.

5. To task; to keep employed as a penal injunction.
Sore travel hath God given to the sons of man,
to be exercised therewith. Ecc. i. 13.

Where pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us, without hope of end. Milton.

6. To practise; to perform.
A man's body is confined to a place; but where friendship is, all offices are granted to him and his deputy; for he may exercise them by his friend.
Bacon's Essays.

Age's chief arts, and arms, are to grow wise;
Virtue to know, and, known, to exercise.
Denham.

7. To exert; to put in use.
The princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. Matt. xx.

Their consciences oblige them to submit to that dominion which their governours had a right to exercise over them. Locke.

8. To practise or use in order to habitual skill.
To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is given, as raw

Young soldiers at their exercising gnaw. Dryden.
Mean while I'll draw up my Numidian troop
Within the square, to exercise their arms.

To EXERCISE. v. n. To use exercise; to labour for health or for amusement.

The Lacedemonians were remarkable for the sport, and Alexander the Great frequently exercised at it. Brown.

EXERCISER. n. f. [from exercise.] He that directs or uses exercise. Dict.

EXERCITATION. n. f. [exercitatio, Latin.]
1. Exercise.

It were some extenuation of the curse, if in sedore vultus tui were confinable unto corporal exercitations. Brown.

2. Practice; use.
By frequent exercitations we form them within us. Felton.

To EXERT. v. a. [exero, Latin.]

1. To use with an effort; to use with ardour and vehemence.
When the service of Britain requires your courage and conduct, you may exert them both. Dryden.

Whate'er I am, each faculty,
The utmost power of my exerted soul
Preserves a being only for your service. Rowe.

2. To put forth; to perform.
When the will has exerted an act of command upon any faculty of the soul, or member of the body, it has done all that the whole man, as a moral agent, can do for the actual exercise or employment of such a faculty or member. Sauleb.

3. To enforce; to push to an effort. With the reciprocal pronoun.
Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still;
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden.

4. To bring out.
The several parts lay hidden in the piece,
Th' occasion but exerted that or this. Dryden.

5. To emit; to push out; to put forth.
The orchard loves to wave
With Winter Winds, before the gems exert,
Their feeble heads. Philips.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight Exert their heads from underneath the mafs,
And upward shoot and kindle as they pass,
And with diffusive light adorn the heavenly place. Dryden.

EXERTION. n. f. [from exert.] The act of exerting; effort.

EXESION. n. f. [exesus, Latin.] The act of eating through.
Theophrastus denieth the exesion or forcing of vipers through the belly of the dam. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXESTUATION. n. f. [exestuatio, Latin.] The state of boiling; tumultuous heat; effervescence;
ebullition.

Saltpetre is in operation a cold body; physicians and chymists give it in fevers, to alay the inward exstuations of the blood and humours. Boyle.

To EXFOLIATE. v. a. [ex and folium, Latin.]
To shell off; separate, as a corrupt bone from the sound part. A term of chirurgery.

Our work went on successfully, the bone exfo-liating from the edges. Wifeman's Surgery.

EXFOLIATION. n. f. [from exfoliate.] The process by which the corrupted part of the bone separates from the sound.

If the bone be dressed, the flesh will soon arise in that cut off the bone, and make exfoliation of what is necessary, and incarnate it. Wifeman's Surgery.

EXFOLIATIVE. ad. [from exfoliate.] That which has the power of procuring exfoliation.

Dress the bone with the milder exfoliatives, till the burnt bone is cast off. Wifeman's Surgery.

EXF-

EXH

EXHA'LE. adj. [from exhalo.] That which may be evaporated or exhaled.

The fire may resolve some of the more spirituous and exhalable parts, whereof distillation has shewn me that alabaster is not destitute, into vapours. Boyle.

EXHALA'TION. n. f. [exhalatio, Latin.]

1. The act of exhaling or sending out in vapours; emission.

2. The state of evaporating or flying out in vapours; evaporation.

3. That which rises in vapours, and sometimes takes the form of meteors.

No nat'l exhalation in the sky,
No 'scape of nature, no distemper'd day,
But they would pluck away its nat'l cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs. Shakespeare.

Moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous lustre, he must needs, as the sun, raise many envious exhalations; which, condensed, by a popular odium, are capable to cast a cloud upon the brightest merit and integrity. King Charles.

A fabrick huge

Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet. Milton.
It is no wonder if the earth be often shaken.
there being quantities of exhalations within those mines, or cavernous passages, that are capable of rarefaction and inflammation. Burn.

The growing tow'rs like exhalations rise,
And the huge columns heave into the skies. Pope.

To EXHA'LE. v. a. [exhalo, Latin.]

1. To send or draw out in vapours or fumes.
Yon light is not daylight, I know it well:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer. Shakespeare.

I flattered myself with the hopes that the vapour had been exhaled. Temple.

Fear freezes minds; but love, like heat,
Exhales the foul sublime to seek her native seat. Dryden.

2. To draw out.

See, dead Henry's wounds

Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh!
Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity;
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood
From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells!
Shakespeare.

EXHA'LEMENT. n. f. [from exhalo.] Matter exhaled; vapour.

Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross and corporal exhalament, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scales. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To EXHA'UST. v. a.

1. To drain; to diminish; to deprive by draining.

Single men be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhausted. Bacon's Essays.
Spermatick matter of a virtuous sort abounds in the blood, exhausts it of its best spirits, and derives the flower of it to the seminal vessels. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. To draw out totally; to draw 'till nothing is left.

Though the knowledge they have left us be worth our study, yet they exhausted not all its treasures: they left a great deal for the industry and fagacity of after-ages. Locke.

The nurrling grove

Seems fair awhile, cherish'd with foster earth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails. Philips.

EXHA'USTION. n. f. [from exhaust.] The act of drawing or draining.

EXHA'USTLESS. adj. [from exhaust.] Not to be emptied; not to be all drawn off; inexhaust-ible.

Of heat and light, what everdure stores
Brought from the sun's exhaustless golden shores,
Through gulphs immense of intervening air,
Enrich the earth, and every loss repair. Blackm.
To EXHIBIT. v. a. [exhibeo, Lat.]

1. To offer to view or use; to offer or propose in a formal or publick manner.

If any claim redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

He suffered his attorney-general to exhibit a charge of high-treason against the earl. Clarendon.

2. To show; to display.

One of an unfortunate constitution is perpetually exhibiting a miserable example of the weakness of mind and body. Pope.

EXHIBITER. n. f. [from exhibit.] He that offers any thing, as a petition or charge, in a publick manner.

He seems indifferent,

Or rather swaying more upon our part,
Than cherishing th' exhibitors against us. Shakespeare.

EXHIBITION. n. f. [from exhibit.]

1. The act of exhibiting; display; setting forth.
What are all mechanick works, but the sensible exhibition of mathematick demonstrations? Grew's Optic. Sac.

2. Allowance; salary; pension: it is much used for pensions allowed to scholars at the university.

I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due preference of place and exhibition,
As levels with her breeding. Shakespeare. Othello.

What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me. Shakespeare.

All was assigned to the army and garrisons there, and she received only a pension or exhibition out of his coffers. Bacon.

He is now neglected, and driven to live in exile upon a small exhibition. Swift.

3. Payment; recompence.
I would not do such a thing for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition. Shakespeare's Othello.

EXHIBITIVE. adj. [from exhibit.] Representative; displaying.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather, they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously exhibitive or representative, according to the various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

To EXHILARATE. v. a. [exhilare, Lat.] To make cheerful; to cheer; to fill with mirth; to enliven; to glad; to gladden.

The coming into a fair garden, the coming into a fair room richly furnished, a beautiful person, and the like, do delight and exhilarate the spirits much. Bacon's Natural History.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapours bland
About their spirits, had play'd, and inmost pow'rs Made err, was now exhal'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

Let them thank

Boon nature, that thus annually supplies
Their vaults, and with her former liquid gifts Exhilarates their languid minds, within The golden mean confin'd. Philips.

EXHILARA'TION. n. f. [from exhilarate.]

1. The act of giving gaiety.

2. The state of being enlivened.

Exhilaration hath some affinity with joy, though it be a much lighter motion. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To EXHORT. v. a. [exhortor, Latin.] To incite by words to any good action.

We beseech you, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us, how you ought to walk, so ye would abound. Theff.

My duty is to exhort you to consider the dignity of that holy mystery. Common Prayer.

Designing or exhorting glorious war. Milton.

EXHORTATION. n. f. [from exhort.]

1. The act of exhorting; incitement to good.

If we will not encourage publick beneficence,
'till we are secure that no storm shall overturn what we help to build, there is no room for exhortations to charity. Atterbury.

2. The form of words by which one is exhorted.
I'll end my exhortation after dinner. Shakespeare.

EXHORTATORY. adj. [from exhort.] Tending to exhort.

EXI

EXHORTER. n. f. [from exhort.] One who exhorts or encourages by words.

To EXICCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Latin.] To dry;
to dry up. Diarr.

EXICCA'TION. n. f. [from exsicco.] A refacti-on; act of drying up; state of being dried up.

What is more easily refuted than that old vulgar assertion of an universal drought and exiccation of the earth? As if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never descend again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere. Bentley.

EXICCATIVE. adj. [from exsicco.] Drying in quality; having the power of drying.

EXIGENCE. n. f. [This word is probably only a corruption of exigents, vitiated by an unskillful pronunciation.]

1. Demand; want; need.

As men, we are at our own choice, both for time and place and form, according to the exigence of our own occasions in private. Hooker.

You have heard what the present condition and exigencies of these several charities are. Atterb.

While our fortunes exceed not the measure of real convenience, and are adapted to the exigencies of our station, we perceive the hand of Providence in our gradual and successive supplies. Rogers.

2. Pressing necessity; distress; sudden occasion.

This dissimulation in war may be called strata-gem and conduct; in other exigencies address and dexterity. Broome.

Now in such exigencies not to need,
Upon my word you must be rich indeed!

A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves. Pope.

EXIGENT. n. f. [exigens, Lat.]

1. Pressing business; occasion that requires immediate help.

In such an exigent I see not how they could have staid to deliberate about any other regiment than that which already was devised to their hands. Hooker, Preface.

The council met, your guards to find you sent,
And know your pleasure in this exigent. Waller.

2. [A law term.] A writ sued when the defendant is not to be found, being part of the process leading to an outlawry. Shakespeare uses it for any extremity. Hammer.

3. End.

These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,
Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent. Shakespeare.

EXIGUITY. n. f. [exiguus, Lat.] Smallness; diminutiveness; slenderness.

The exiguity and shape of the extant particles is now supposed. Boyle on Colours.

EXIGUOUS. adj. [exiguus, Lat.] Small; diminutive; little. Not used.

Their subtle parts and exiguous dose are consumed and evaporated in less than two hours time. Harvey.

EXILE. n. f. [exilium, Lat.] It seems anciently to have had the accent indifferently on either syllable: now it is uniformly on the first.]

1. Banishment; state of being banished from one's country.

Our state of bodies would bewray what life
We've led since thy exile. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Welcome is exile, welcome were my death. Shakespeare.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger
But with a grain of day, I would not buy Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakespeare.

2. The person banished.

O must the wretched exiles ever mourn,
Nor after length of rowling years return? Dryden's Virgil.

Ulysses, sole of all the victor train,
An exile from his dear paternal coast,
Deplor'd his absent queen, and empire lost. Pope's Odyssey.

EXILE. adj. [exilis, Lat.] Small; slender; not full;

EXI

full; not powerful. Not in use, except in philosophical writings.

It were good to enquire what means may be to draw forth the exile heat which is in the air; for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather.

In a virginal, when the lid is down, it maketh a more exile sound than when the lid is open.

To EXILE. v. a. [from the noun. This had formerly the accent on the last syllable, now generally on the first, though Dryden has used both.] To banish; to drive from a country; to transport.

Call home our exil'd friends abroad,
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny.

Foul subornation is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness' land.

For that offence,
Immediately we do exile him hence.

They, fettered with the bonds of a long night,
Lay there exiled from the eternal Providence.

His brutal manners from his breast exil'd,
His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd.

Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,
Expel'd and exil'd.

EXILEMENT. n. f. [from exile.] Banishment.
Fitzoborn was discarded into foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement.

EXILIATION. n. f. [exiliatio, Latin.] The act of springing or rushing out suddenly.

From saltpetre proceedeth the force and report of gunpowder: for sulphur and small-coal mixt, will not take fire with noise or exhibition; and powder, which is made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report.

EXILITY. n. f. [exilis, Latin.] Slenderness; smallness; diminution.

Certain flies, called ephemera, live but a day: the cause is the exility of the spirit, or perhaps the absence of the fun.

For exility of the voice or other sounds, it is certain that the voice doth pass through solid and hard bodies, if they be not too thick; and through water, which is likewise a very close body, and such an one as letteth not in air.

A body, by being subtilized, can lose nothing of its corporeity; neither can it hereby gain any thing but exility; for all degrees of subtilty are essentially the same thing.

EXIMIOUS. adj. [eximius, Latin.] Famous; eminent; conspicuous; excellent.

EXINATION. n. f. [exinatio, Latin.] Privation; loss.

He is not more impotent in his glory than he was in his examination.

To EXIST. v. n. [existo, Latin.] To be; to have a being.

It is as easy to conceive that an Almighty Power might produce a thing out of nothing, and make that to exist de novo, which did not exist before; as to conceive the world to have had no beginning, but to have existed from eternity.

It seems reasonable to enquire, how such a multitude comes to make but one idea, since that combination does not always exist together in nature.

One year is past, a different scene!

No farther mention of the dean:

Who now, alas, no more is mist

Than if he never did exist.

EXISTENCE. n. f. [existentia, low Latin.]

EXISTENCY. n. f. State of being; actual possession of being.

Nor is only the existency of this animal considerable, but many things delivered thereof.

It is impossible any being can be eternal with successive eternal physical changes, or variety of states or manner of existency, naturally and necessarily concomitant unto it.

The foul, secur'd in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger, and defies its point.

When a being is considered as possible, it is said to have an essence or nature: such were all things before the creation. When it is considered as actual, then it is said to have existence also.

EXISTENT. adj. [from exist.] Having being; in possession of being or of existence.

Whatsoever sign the sun possessed, whose recess or vicinity defineth the quarters of the year, those seasons were actually existent.

The eyes and minds are fastened on objects which have no real being, as if they were truly existent.

EXISTIMATION. n. f. [existimatio, Latin.]

1. Opinion.

2. Esteem.

EXIT. n. f. [exit, Latin.]

1. The term set in the margin of plays to mark the time at which the player goes off the stage.

2. Retreat; departure; act of quitting the stage; act of quitting the theatre of life.

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players:
They have their exits and their entrances,
And one man in his time plays many parts.

A regard for fame becomes a man more towards the exit than at his entrance into life.

Many of your old comrades live a short life, and make a figure at their exit.

3. Passage out of any place.

In such a puerous substance as the brain, they might find an easy either entrance or exit, almost every where.

4. Way by which there is a passage out.

The fire makes its way, forcing the water forth through its ordinary exits, wells, and the outlets of rivers.

EXITIAL. adj. [exitialis, Latin.] Desfructious.

EXITIOUS. adj. tive; fatal; mortal; deleterious. Not in use.

Most exitial fevers, although not concomitated with the tokens, exanthemata, antraces, or carbuncles, are to be censured pestilential.

EXODUS. n. f. [ἔξοδος.] Departure; journey.

EXODI. n. f. [ney from a place: the second book of Moses is so called, because it describes the journey of the Israelites from Egypt.

In all probability their years continued to be three hundred and sixty-five days, ever since the time of the Jewish exodus at least.

EXOLETE. adj. [exoletus, Latin.] Obsolete; out of use.

To EXOLVE. v. a. [exolvere, Latin.] To loose; to pay.

EXOLUTION. n. f. [exolutio, Latin.] Laxation of the nerves.

Considering the exolution and languor ensuing that action in some, we cannot but think it much abridgeth our days.

EXOPHALOS. n. f. [ἑξ ὀφθαλμοῦ.] A navel rupture.

To EXO'NERATE. v. a. [exonerare, Latin.] To unload; to disburthen; to free from any heavy charge.

The glands being a congeries of vessels curled, circumgrated, and complicated, give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory ones, which afterwards all exonerate themselves into one common ductus.

EXONERATION. n. f. [from exonerare.] The act of disburthening, or discharging.

The body is adapted unto eating, drinking, nutrition, and other ways of repletion and exoneration.

EXOPTABLE. adj. [exoptabilis, Lat.] Desirable; to be fought with eagerness or desire.

EXORABLE. adj. [exorabilis, Lat.] To be moved by intreaty.

EXO

EXO'RBITANCE. n. f. [from exorbitance.]

EXO'RBITANCY. n. f. [from exorbitance.]

1. The act of going out of the tract prescribed

2. Enormity; gross deviation from rule or right.

I see some of this fault cleave to those, who have eminently corrected all other exorbitancies of the tongue.

The reverence of my presence may be a curb to your exorbitancies.

The people were grossly impot on, to commit such exorbitancies as could not end but in the dissolution of the government.

3. Boundless depravity.

Unbounded in exorbitance of ill.

EXO'RBITANT. adj. [ex and orbito, Latin.]

1. Going out of the prescribed track.

2. Deviating from the course appointed or rule established.

What signifies the fiction of the tortoise riding upon the wings of the wind, but to prescribe bounds and measures to our exorbitant passions?

These phenomena are not peculiar to earthquakes in our times, but have been observed in all ages, and particularly those exorbitant commotions of the waters of the globe.

3. Anomalous; not comprehended in a settled rule or method.

The Jews who had laws so particularly determining in all affairs what to do, were notwithstanding continually injured with causes exorbitant, and such as their laws had not provided for.

4. Enormous; beyond due proportion; excessive.

Their subjects would live in great plenty, were not the impositions so very exorbitant; for the courts are too splendid for the territories.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less.

To EXO'RBITATE. v. n. [ex and orbito, Latin.] To deviate; to go out of the track or road prescribed.

The planets sometimes would have approached the sun as near as the orb of Mercury, and sometimes have exorbitated beyond the distance of Saturn.

To E'XORCISE. v. a. [ἐξορκίζω.]

1. To adjure by some holy name.

2. To drive away spirits by certain forms of adjuration.

3. To purify from the influence of malignant spirits by religious ceremonies.

And fry'rs, that through the wealthy regions run,
Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,
And exorcise the beds, and cross the walls.

EXORCISER. n. f. [from exorcise.] One who practises to drive away evil spirits.

EXORCISM. n. f. [ἐξορκισμός.] The form of adjuration, or religious ceremony by which evil and malignant spirits are driven away.

Will his lordship behold and hear our exorcisms?

Symptoms supernatural, must be only curable by supernatural means; namely, by devout prayers or exorcisms.

EXORCIST. n. f. [ἐξορκιστής.]

1. One who by adjurations, prayers, or religious acts, drives away malignant spirits.

Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits.

2. An enchanter; a conjuror. Improperly.

Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjur'd up
My mortified spirit.

Is there no exorcist?

Beguides the truer office of mine eyes?
Is't real that I see?

EXORDIUM. n. f. [Latin.] A formal preface; the proemial part of a composition.

Nor

Nor will I thee detain
With poets fictions, nor oppresses thine ear
With circumstance, and long exordiums here.
May's Virgil.

I have been distast'd at this way of writing, by reason of long prefaces and exordiums.

Addison on Models.
EXORNA'TION. n. f. [exornatio, Latin.] Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

It seemeth that all those curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker.

Hyperbolic exornations and elegancies many much affect. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

EXORSSATED. adj. [exorsatus, Latin.] Deprived of bones. Dill.

EXOSTOSIS. n. f. [ἐξ and ὄστω.] Any protube-rance of a bone that is not natural, as often happens in venereal cases. Quincy.

EXOSSEOUS. adj. [ex and ossa, Latin.] Wanting bones; boneless; formed without bones.

Thus we daily observe in the heads of fishes, as also in snails and soft exosseous animals, nature near the head hath placed a flat white stone, or testa-ceous concretion. Brown.

EXOTICK. adj. [ἐξωτικός.] Foreign; not produced in our own country; not domestic.

Some learned men treat of the nature of letters as of some remote exotic thing, whereof we had no knowledge but by fabulous relations.

Holder's Elements of Speech.
Continue fresh hot-beds to entertain such exotic plants as arrive not to their perfection without them. Evelyn's Kalendar.

EXOTICK. n. f. A foreign plant.

Claudian was feated on the other fummit, which was barren, and produced, on some spots, plants that are unknown to Italy, and such as the gardeners call exotics. Addison's Guardian.

To EXPAND. v. a. [expando, Latin.]

1. To spread; to lay open as a net or sheet.

2. To dilate; to spread out every way; to diffuse.

She useth most the target to fence away the blow, and leaves all other weapon's to the Alchoran to propagate and expand itself. Howel.

Bellerophon's horse, framed of iron, and placed between two loadstones, with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown's Vulg. Errurs.

An animal growing, expands its fibres in the air
as a fluid. Arbuthnot on Air.

Along the stream of time thy name
Expanded flies, and gathers all its fame. Pope.

EXPANSE. n. f. [expansum, Latin.] A body widely extended without inequalities.

A murmuring found
Of waters issue from a cave, and spread
Into a liquid plain; then flood unmov'd,
Pure as th' expanse of heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Bright as th' ethereal glows the green expanse. Savage.

On the smooth expanse of crystal lakes,
The sinking stone at first a circle makes;
The trembling surface, by the motion stirr'd,
Spreads in a second circle, then a third;
Wide, and more wide; the floating rings advance,
Fill all the wat'ry plain, and to the margin dance. Pope.

EXPANSIBILITY. n. f. [from expansible.] Capacity of extension; possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.

With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another; else all fluids would be alike in weight, expansibility, and all other qualities. Grew.

EXPANSIBLE. adj. [from expansus, Latin.] Capable; capable to be spread into a wider surface.
Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded. Grew.

EXPANSION. n. f. [from expand.]
1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.

'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it.

Bentley.

2. The act of spreading out.

The easy expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight. Grew's Cogn. Sacra.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended.

The capacious mind of man cannot be confined by the limits of the world: it extends its thoughts even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes excursions into that incomprehensible inane. Locke.

4. Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter.

Distance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which expresses this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter. Locke.

It would for ever take an useless flight,
Lost in expansion, void and infinite.

Blackmore's Creation.
EXPANSIVE. adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space.

The elastick or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather glaßes.

Ray on the Creation.
Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold.

Thomson.

To EXPATiate. v. n. [expatio, Latin.]

1. To range at large; to rove without any prescribed limits.

Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expate in. Addison's Spectator.

He looks in heav'n with more than mortal eyes,
Bids his free soul expatiate in the skies;
Amidst her kindred stars familiar roam,
Survey the region, and confess her home. Pope.

Expatriate free o'er all this scene of man;
A mighty maze! but not without a plan. Pope.

With wonder seiz'd, we view the pleasing ground,

And walk delighted, and expatiate round.

Pope's Odyssey.

2. To enlarge upon in language.

They had a custom of offering the tongues to Mercury, because they believed him the giver of eloquence: Dacier expatiates upon this custom.

Broome.

3. To let loose; to allow to range. This sense, which is active, is very improper.

Make choice of a subject, which, being of itself capable of all that colours and the elegance of design can possibly give, shall afterwards afford art an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate itself.

Dryden's Dufrisnoy.

To EXPECT. v. a. [expecto, Latin.]

1. To have a previous apprehension of either good or evil.

We expected
Immediate dissolution. Milton.

Needs must the serpent now his capital bruise Expect with mortal pain. Milton.

Good with bad
Expect to hear, supernal grace contending With sinfulness of man. Milton.

Eve, now expect great tidings.

2. To wait for; to attend the coming.

The guards.
By me incamp'd on yonder hill, expect Their motion. Milton.

While, expecting there the queen, he rais'd
His wond'ring eyes, and round the temple gaz'd.

Dryden.

To EXPECT. v. n. To wait; to stay.

Elihu had expected till Job had spoken. Job.

EXPECTABLE. adj. [from expect.] To be expected; to be hoped or feared.

Occult and spiritual operations are not expectable from ice; for being but water congealed, it can never make good such qualities. Brown's Vul. Err.

EXPECTANCE. n. f. [from expect.]

EXPECTANCY. n. f. [from expect.]

1. The act or state of expecting; expectation.

Every moment is expectancy
Of more arrivance. Shakespeare's Othello.

Satyrs leave your petulance,
Or else rail upon the moon,
Your expectancy is too soon;
For before the second cock
Crow, the gates will not-unlock.

Ben Jonson's Fairy Prince.
This blessed expectancy must be now my theme.

Boyle.
But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stay!

Expectancy calls thee now another way. Milton.

2. Something expected.

There is expectancy here from both the sides,
What further you will do. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cress.

3. Hope; that of which the expectation is accompanied with pleasure.

Oh, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!
The expectancy and rose of the fair state. Shakespeare's Ham.

EXPECTANT. adj. [French.] Waiting in expectation.

Her majesty has offered concessions, in order to remove scruples raised in the mind of the expectant heir. Swift.

EXPECTANT. n. f. [from expect.] One who waits in expectation of any thing; one held in dependence by his hopes.

They, vain expectants of the bridal hour,
My stores in riotous expence devour. Pope's Odyssey.

This treatise was agreeable to the whole nation;
except those who had employments, or were expectants. Swift to Pope.

EXPECTATION. n. f. [expectatio, Latin.]

1. The act of expecting.

The trees
Should have born men, and expectation faint'd, Longing for what it had not. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleo.

The rest,
That are within the note of expectation,
Already are i' th' court. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear. Congreve.

2. The state of expecting either with hope or fear.

Live in a constant and serious expectation of that day, when we must appear before the Judge of heaven and earth. Rogers's Sermons.

3. Prospect of any thing good to come.

My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him. Pf. lxii. 5.

4. The object of happy expectation; the Mel-chiah expected.

Now clear I understand,
What oft my steadiest thoughts have search't in vain,
Why our great expectation should be call'd

The feed of women. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. A state in which something excellent is expected from us.

How fit it will be for you, born so great a prince, and of so rare not only expectation but proof, to divert your thoughts from the way of goodness.

Sidney.

You first came home
From travel with such hopes as made you look'd on,

By all men's eyes, a youth of expectation;
Pleas'd with your growing virtue I receiv'd you.

Greene.

EXPECTER. n. f. [from expect.]

1. One who has hopes of something.

These are not great expecters under your administration, according to the period of governors here. Swift.

2. One who waits for another.

Signify this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part.

Shakespeare's Troil. and Cress.

To EXPECTORATE. v. a. [ex and pectus, Lat.]

To eject from the breast.

Excrementitious humours are expectorated by a cough after a cold or an asthma. Harvey on Const.

Morbifick matter is either attenuated so as to be returned into the channels, or expectorated by coughing. Arbuthnot.

EXPECTORATION. n. f. [from expectorare.]

1. The act of discharging from the breast.

2. That discharge which is made by coughing, bringing up phlegm, or any thing that obstructs
the vessels of the lungs, and straitens the breath.

Quincy.

EXP

With water, vinegar, and honey, in pluries and inflammations of the lungs, he mixeth spices, for promoting expectoration. Arbutnot on Aliments.

EXPECTORATIVE. adj. [from expectorare.] Having the quality of promoting expectoration.

Syrups and other expectoratives, in coughs, must necessarily occasion a greater cough. Harvey on Con.

EXPEDIENCE. } n. f. [from expedire.]
EXPEDIENT. }

1. Fitness; propriety; suitable to an end.

Solemn dedications of things set apart for Divine Worship, could never have been universally practised, had not right reason dictated the high expediency and great use of such practices. South.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for expedition; adventure; or attempt.

Let me hear

What yesternight our council did decree.

In forwarding this dear expedience. Shak. f. Hen. IV.

3. It is also used by Shakespeare for expedition; haste: dispatch.

I shall break

The cause of our expedience to the queen,

And get her leave to part. Shak. f. Ant. and Cleo.

Eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expedience.

Shakespeare's Richard II.

EXPEDIENT. adj. [expedit, Latin.]

1. Proper; fit; convenient; suitable.

All things are not expedient: in things indifferent there is a choice; they are not always equally expedient. Hooker.

When men live as if there were no God, it becomes expedient for them that there should be none; and then they endeavour to persuade themselves so.

Tillotson.

2. In Shakespeare, quick; expeditious.

The adverse winds,

Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time

To land his legions all as soon as I:

His arches are expedient to this town.

Shakespeare's King John.

EXPEDIENT. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. That which helps forward, as means to an end. God does not protect for our sorrow, but our innocence; and would never have invited us to the one, but as an expedient to the other.

Decay of Piety.

2. A shift; means to an end which are contrived in an exigence, or difficulty.

Th' expedient pleas'd, where neither lost his right;

Marsh'd the day, and Venus had the night. Dryd.

He flies to a new expedient to solve the matter, and supposes an earth of a make and frame like that of Des Cartes. Woodward.

EXPEDIENTLY. adv. [from expedient.]

1. Fitly; suitably; conveniently.

2. Hastily; quickly. Not used.

of the grandeur of the Roman empire. Arbutnot on Coins.

EXPERIENCE. n. f. [experientia, Latin.]

1. Practice; frequent trial.

Hereof experience hath informed reason, and time hath made those things apparent which were hidden. Raleigh.

But apt the mind or fancy is to rove

Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end,

'Till warn'd, or by experience taught, she learn,

That not to know at large of things remote

From use, obscure and subtle, but to know

That which before us lies in daily life,

Is the prime wisdom; what is more, is fume

Or emptiness, or fond impertinence,

And renders us in things that most concern

Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.

2. Knowledge gained by trial and practice.

Boys immature in knowledge,

Pawn their experience to their present pleasure. Shakespeare.

But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,

Whom age and long experience render wife. Pope.

of the distinct species; or learn them from such as are used to that sort of things, and are experi- enced in them. Locke.

2. Wise by long practice.

To him experient Nestor thus rejoind,

O friend! what sorrows do't thou bring to mind! Pope.

EXPER-

EXP

EXPERIENCER. n. f. One who makes trials; a practitioner of experiments.

A curious experienter did affirm, that the likeness of any object, if strongly enlightened, will appear to another, in the eye of him that looks strongly and steadily upon it, 'till he be dazzled by it; even after he shall have turned his eyes from it. Digby on Bodies.

EXPERIMENT. n. f. [experimentum, Latin.] Trial of any thing; something done in order to discover an uncertain or unknown effect.

That which sheweth them to be wise, is the gathering of principles out of their own particular experiments, and the framing of our particular experiments, according to the rule of their principles, shall make us such as they are. Hooker.

It is good also not to try experiments in states, except the necessity be urgent, or the utility evident. Bacon.

Adam! by sad experiment I know,
How little weight with thee my words can find. Milton.

'Till his fall man's mind was ignorant of nothing but of sin; or, at least, it rested in the notion without the smart of the experiment. South's Sermons.

When we are searching out the nature or properties of any being by various methods of trial, this sort of observation is called experiment. Watts on the Mind.

TO EXPERIMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To try; to search out by trial.

Francisco Redi experimented that no putrefied flesh will of itself, if all insects be carefully kept from it, produce any. Ray on the Creation.

EXPIATION. n. f. [from expiate.]

1. The act of expiating or atoning for any crime.

2. The means by which we atone for crimes; atonement.

Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The former part of this poem is but a due expiation for my not serving my king and country in it. Dryden.

Let a man's innocence be what it will, let his virtues rise to the highest pitch of perfection, there will be still in him to many secret sins, so many human frailties, so many offences of ignorance, passion, and prejudice, so many unguarded words and thoughts, that without the advantage of such an expiation and atonement, as Christianity has revealed to us, it is impossible he should be saved. Addison's Spectator.

3. Practices by which the threats of ominous prodigies were averted.

Upon the birth of such monsters, the Grecians and Romans did use divers sorts of expiations, and to go about their principal cities with many solemn ceremonies and sacrifices. Hayward.

EXPIATORY. adj. [from expiate.] Having the power of expiation or atonement.

His voluntary death for others prevailed with God, and had the force of an expiatory sacrifice. Hooker.

EXPIATION. n. f. [expilatio, Latin.] Robbery; the act of committing waste upon land to the loss of the heir.

EXP

EXPIRATION. n. f. [from expire.]

1. That act of respiration which thrusts the air out of the lungs, and contracts the cavity of the breast. Quincy.

In all expiration the motion is outwards, and therefore rather driveth away the voice than draweth it. Bacon's Natural History.

Of an inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increases upon inspiration; by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. The last emission of breath; death.

We have heard him breathe the groan of expiration. Rambler.

3. Evaporation; act of fuming out.

4. Vapour; matter expired.

Words of this sort resemble the wind in fury and impetuosity, in transiency and sudden expiration. Decay of Piety.

Clothe air is warmer than open air, as the cause of gold is an expiration from the earth, which in open places is stronger. Bacon's Natural History.

5. The cessation of any thing to which life is figuratively ascribed.

To satisfy ourselves of its expiration we darkened the room, and in vain endeavoured to discover any spark of fire. Boyle.

6. The conclusion of any limited time.

If 'till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me. Shakespeare's King Lear.

This he did in a fortnight after the expiration of the treaty of Uxbridge. Clarendon.

TO EXPIRE. v. a. [expiro, Latin.]

1. To breathe out.

To save his body from the scorching fire,
Which he from hellish entrails did expire. Fairy Queen.

Anatomy exhibits the lungs in a continual motion of inspiring and expiring air. Harvey on Consumptions.

This chaff'd the boar; his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire. Dryden's Ovid.

2. To exhale; to send out in exhalations.

The fluid which is thus secreted, and expired forth along with the air, goes off in insensible parcels. Woodward.

3. To close; to conclude; to bring to an end. Obsolete.

When as time flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that these two javels
Should render up a reck'ning of their travels. Hubbard's Tale.

TO EXPIRE. v. n.

1. To make an emission of the breath.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stop'd, it suddenly dies. Walton's Angler.

2. To die; to breathe the last.

For when the fair in all their pride expires,
To their first elements the souls retire. Pope.

3. To perish; to fall; to be destroyed.

All thy praise is vain,
Save what this verse, which never shall expire,
Shall to thee purchase. Spenser.

The dead man's knell,
Is there scarce ask'd, for whom; and good men's lives

Expire before the flowers in their caps;
Dying or ere they sicken. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. To fly out with a blast.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
The linstocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires;
The vigorous seaman every porthole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.

5. To conclude; to terminate; to come to an end.

A month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond. Shakespeare's Bond.

TO EXPLAIN. v. a. [explano, Latin.] To explain.

pond: to illustrate; to clear by notes or commentaries.

Such is the original design, however we may explain it away. Ayliffe's Parergon.

You will have variety of commentators to explain the difficult passages to you.

Some explain'd the meaning quite away. Pope.

EXPLAINABLE. adj. [from explain.] Capable of being explained or interpreted.

It is symbolically explainable, and implieth purification and cleanness. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXPLAINER. n. f. [from explain.] Expofitor; interpreter; commentator.

EXPLANATION. n. f. [from explain.]

1. The act of explaining or interpreting.

2. The sense given by an explainer or interpreter.

Before this explanation be condemned, and the bill found upon it, some lawyers should fully inform the jury. Swift.

EXPLANATORY. adj. [from explain.] Containing explanation.

Had the printer given me notice, I would have printed the names, and writ explanatory notes. Swift.

EXPLETIVE. n. f. [expletivum, Latin.] Something used only to take up room; something of which the use is only to prevent a vacancy.

These are not only useful expletives to matter, but great ornaments of style. Swift.

Of the ear the open vowels tire,
While expletives their feeble aid do join.

Pope's Essay on Criticism.

Expletives, whether words or syllables, are made use of purely to supply a vacancy: do, before verbs plural, is absolutely such; and future re-finers may explode did and do. Pope.

EXPLICABLE. adj. [from explicate.] Explainable; possible to be explained.

Many difficulties, scarce explicable with any certainty, occur in the fabric of human nature.

Great variety there is in compound bodies, and little many of them seem to be explicable. Boyle.

EXPLICATE. v. a. [explicare, Latin.]

1. To unfold; to expand.

They explicate the leaves, and ripen food
For the silk labourers of the mulberry wood. Blackmore.

2. To explain; to clear; to interpret.

They do not understand that part of Christian philosophy which explicates the secret nature of this divine sacrament. Taylor.

Although the truths may be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hal's Origin of Mankind.

The last verse of his last satyr is not yet sufficiently explicated. Dryden.

EXPLICATION. n. f. [from explicate.]

1. The act of opening; unfolding or expanding.

2. The act of explaining; interpretation; explanation.

The church preacheth, first publishing, by way of testimony, the truth of which from them she hath received, written in the sacred volumes of Scripture; secondly, by way of explication, discovering the mysteries which lie hid therein. Hosker.

Many things are needful for explication, and many for application unto particular occasions. Hosker.

Allowances are made in the explication of our Saviour's parables, which hold only as to the main sense. Atterbury.

3. The sense given by an explainer; interpretation.

'Tis the substance of this theory I mainly depend upon: many single explications and particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

EXPLICATIVE. adj. [from explicate.] Having a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the subject of a complex proposition be either essential or any way necessary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the subject; as, every mortal man is a son of Adam. Watts's Logick.

EXPLICATION. n. f. [from explicate.] Search; examination.

For exact explication scales should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verticity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Use may be made of the like way of explication in that enquiry which puzzles so many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORATOR. n. f. [from explorate.] One who searches; a searcher; an examiner.

EXPLORATORY. adj. [from explorate.] Searching; examining.

EXPLICATION. n. f. [from explicate.] Expound-er; interpreter; explainer.

EXPLICIT. adj. [explicitus, Latin.] Unfolded; plain; clear; not obscure; not merely implied.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of censuring by the lump, and bring things close to explicit proof and evidence.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

These speculations, when most refined, serve only to shew how impossible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite.

South's Sermons.

EXPLICITLY. adv. [from explicit.] Plainly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querulous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's disposals; but where it is indulged, it usually is its own expofitor, and explicitly avows it.

Government of the Tongue.

EXPLODE. v. a. [explodo, Latin.]

1. To drive out disgracefully with some noise of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect, but open disdain or scorn.

Him old and young
Exploded, and had seiz'd with violent hands,
Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence Unseen amid' the throng. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Thus was th' applause they meant,
Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame,
Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milt.

Old age explodes all but morality. Roscommon.

There is pretended, that a magnetical globe or terrella, being placed upon its poles, would have a constant rotation; but this is commonly exploded, as being against all experience. Wilkins's Deedalus.

Shall that man pass for a proficient in Christ's school, who would have been exploded in the school of Zeno? South.

Provided that no word, which a society shall give a sanction to, be antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they shall find occasion for. Swift.

2. To drive out with noise and violence.

But late the kindled powder did explode
The maily ball, and the brass tube unload. Black.

EXPLODER. n. f. [from explode.] An hisser; one who drives out any person or thing with open contempt.

EXPLOIT. n. f. [exploitum, Latin, res exploitata.] A design accomplished; an achievement; a successful attempt.

Know't thou not any whom corrupting gold
Would tempt into a close exploit of death? Shakespeare's Richard III.

Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will that no exploit have done. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

How shall I relate
To human sense th' invisible exploits
Of warring spirits? Milton's Paradise Lost.

He breaks fierce Hannibal's insulting heats;
Of which exploit thus our friend Ennius treats. Denham.

Will you thus dishonour
Your past exploits, and fully all your wars! Addison's Cato.

To EXPLOIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to achieve. Not used.

He exploited great matters in his own person in Gallia, and by his son in Spain. Camden's Remains.

To EXPLORATE. v. a. [exploro, Latin.] To search out; to try by searching; to explore.

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith exporate their way. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXPLORATION. n. f. [from explorate.] Search; examination.

For exact exploration scales should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verticity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Use may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles so many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORATOR. n. f. [from explorate.] One who searches; a searcher; an examiner.

EXPLORATORY. adj. [from explorate.] Searching; examining.

To EXPLORE. v. a. [exploro, Latin.] To try to search into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that fight endur'd not, where he stood
Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds,
And thus his own undaunted heart explodes. Milton.

Divers opinions I have been inclined to question not only as a naturalist, but as a chymist, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philosophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire. Boyle.

But Capps, and the rest of fonder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the wat'ry deep; at least to bore
The hollow sides, and hidden frauds explore. Dryden's Ænoid.

The mighty Stagyrite first left the shore,
Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore;
He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
Led by the light of the Mæonian star.

Pope's Essay on Criticism.

EXPLOREMENT. n. f. [from explore.] Search; trial.

The frustrated search of Porta, upon the exploration of many, could scarce find one.

EXPLOSION. n. f. [from explode.] The act of driving out any thing with noise and violence.

Those parts which abound with strata of stone, or marble, making the strongest opposition, are the most furiously shattered; an event observable not only in this, but all other explosions whatever.

Woodward's Natural History.

In gunpowder the charcoal and sulphur easily take fire, and set fire to the nitre; and the spirit of the nitre being thereby rarified into vapour, rushes out with explosion, after the manner that the vapour of water rushes out of an æolipile: the sulphur also, being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the explosion. Newton's Opt.

With explosion vast,
The thunder raises his tremendous voice. Thomson.

EXPLOSIVE. adj. [from explode.] Driving out with noise and violence.

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power, renders the shock greater.

EXPONENT. n. f. [from expono, Latin.]

Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent: thus six is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in arithmetical progression, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents; and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms; for addition and subtraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

EXPONENTIAL. adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraick and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms, though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendental, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

To EXPOR. v. a. [exporto, Latin.] To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy.

Bacon's Essays, Civil and Moral.

Edward III. by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandise, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand.

Addison's Freeholder.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes.

Arbutnot on Coins.

EXPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

EXPORTA-

EXPORTATION. n. f. [from export.] The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessities, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

EXPORTER. n. f. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each species be by the law bigger or less. Locke.

TO EXPOSE. v. a. [expono, expositum, Lat. expono, French.]

1. To lay open; to make liable.
Take physic, Pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And shew Heaven just. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Who here
Will envy whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim? Milton.

To pass the riper period of his age,
Acting his part upon a crowded stage,
To lasting toils exposed, and endless cares,
To open dangers, and to secret snares. Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.
But still he held his purpose to depart;
For as he lov'd her equal to his life,
He would not to the seas expose his wife. Dryden.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.
Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love;
Then fields, the blades of bury'd corn disclose,
And while the balmy western spirit blows,
Earth to the breath her bosom dares expose. Dryden's Virgil.

4. To lay open to censure or ridicule; to shew in such a state as brings contempt.
Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, Without arraigning their vices. Dryden's Juvenal Dedication.

Tully has justly exposed a precept, that a man should live with his friend in such a manner that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him. Addison's Spectator.

A fool might once himself alone expose;
Now one in verse makes many more in prose. Pope.

Your fame and your property suffer alike, you are at once exposed and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.
Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test, and are pleased to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.
The exposing himself notoriously did change the fortune of the day, when his troops begun to give ground. Clarendon.

7. To cast out to chance.
A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man; and he again exposes him: a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.

Helpless and naked on a woman's knees,
To be expos'd or rear'd as she may please,
Feel her neglect, and pine from her disease. Prior.

8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault. Addison's Spectator.

EXPOSITION. n. f. [from expose.]

1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.
Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbutnot.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great irregularity as to the time of dining. Arbutnot.

2. Explanation; interpretation; [from expono, Latin.]

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text. Shak. Henry IV.

You are a worthy judge;
You know the law: your exposition
Hath been most found. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me. Dryden.

EXPOSITOR. n. f. [expositor, Latin.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A mirth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales. Shaksp.
In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy, which is not contemporaneous unto the authority of expositors. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The sinner's conscience is the best expositor of the mind of God, under any judgment or affliction. Saunders's Sermons.

Scholastic, those copious expositors of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

TO EXPOSTULATE. v. n. [expostulo, Latin.]
To canvass with another; to altercation; to debate without open rupture.

More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that for reverence of some alive
I give a sparing limit to my tongue. Shakespeare's Richard III.

The emperor's ambassador did expostulate with the king, that he had broken his league with the emperor. Hayward.

It is madness for friendless and unarmed innocence to expostulate with invincible power. L'Estrange.

Durst I expostulate with Providence, I then might ask. Cotton.

The bishop will expostulate, and the tenant will have regard to the reasonableness of the demand. Swift.

EXPOSTULATION. n. f. [from expostulate.]

1. Debate; altercation; discussion of an affair in private without rupture.
Expostulations end well between lovers, but ill between friends. Spectator.

2. Charge; accusation.
This makes her bleeding patients to accuse
High Heaven, and these expostulations use;
Could Nature then no private woman grace,
Whom we might dare to love with such a face? Waller.

Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, supposed not to have dealt singly or confidentially in the course of good friendship. Ayliffe's Paragon.

EXPOSTULATOR. n. f. [from expostulate.] One that debates with another without open rupture.

EXPOSTULATORY. adj. [from expostulate.] Containing expostulation.

This fable is a kind of an expostulatory debate between Bounty and Ingratitude. L'Estrange.

EXPOSURE. n. f. [from expose.]

1. The act of exposing or setting out to observation.
2. The state of being open to observation.
When we have our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. The state of being exposed, or being liable to any thing.
Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts i' th' way before thee. Shaksp. Cor.

4. The state of being in danger.
Ajax fets Therites
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How hard soever rounded in with danger. Shakespeare.

5. Exposition; the situation in which the sun or air is received.

The cold now advancing, set such plants as will not endure the house, in pots, two or three inches lower than the surface of some bed, under a southern exposure. Evelyn.

TO EXPOUND. v. a. [expono, Latin.]
1. To explain; to clear; to interpret; to shew the meaning of.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of those words than pope Leo himself expounded them, whose speech, concerning our Lord's ascension, may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker.

This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.
—And this way you have well expounded it. Shakespeare.

He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself. Luke, xxiv. 27.

Those right holy fathers, as in matters of faith they did not make truth, but religiously expounded it; so in matters of ecclesiastical government, they did not create provinces, but ordered the countries which they then had. Raleigh.

2. To examine; to lay open: a Latinism.
He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch with rings and lockets. Hudibras.

EXPOUNDER. n. f. [from expound.] Explainer; interpreter.

This they did partly as faithful witnesses; making a mere relation of what God himself had revealed unto them; and partly as careful expounders, teachers, and persuaders thereof. Hooker.

The best he was,
And faithfulest expounder of the laws. Dryden's Juvenal.

TO EXPRESS. v. a. [exprimo, expressus, Lat.]

1. To copy; to resemble; to represent.
So kids and whelps their fires and dams express,
And so the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden's Virgil.

Adorn a dream, expressing human form,
The shape of him who suffer'd in the storm. Dryden.

2. To represent by any of the imitative arts: as poetry, sculpture, painting.

Each skilful artist shall express thy form
In animated gold. Smith's Phœdra and Hippolitus.

3. To represent in words; to exhibit by language; to utter; to declare.
Less than half we find express,
Envy bid conceal the rest. Milton.

Though they have learned those sounds, yet there are no determined ideas laid up in their minds, which are to be expressed to others by them. Locke.

In moral ideas we have no sensible marks that resemble them, whereby we can set them down: we have nothing but words to express them by. Locke.

True wit is nature to advantage dress'd,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd. Pope.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for dress. Pope.

To shed tears, among the ancients, when they should express their gratitude to the gods with joy, was esteemed a prophanation. Broom.

4. To shew or make known in any manner.
No longer shall thy bodice aptly lace,
That air and shape of harmony express,
Fine by degrees, and delicately less. Prior.

5. To utter; to declare: with the reciprocal pronoun.
Mr. Phillips did express himself with much indignation against me one evening. Pope.

6. To denote; to designate.
Moses and Aaron took these men expressed by their names. Numbers, i. 17.

7. To squeeze out; to force out by compression.
Among the watry juices of fruit are all the fruits out of which drink is expressed; as the grape, and the apple. Bacon.

8. To extort by violence, or elicit by art: a Latinism.
Halters and racks cannot express from thee
More than thy deeds: 'tis only judgment waits Thee. Ben Jonson.

EXPON. n. f. [from expono, Latin.]

1. To explain; to clear; to interpret; to shew the meaning of.

2. To examine; to lay open: a Latinism.

6. To represent in words; to exhibit by language; to utter; to declare.

EXP

Art did express

A quintessence even from nothingness
From dull privatives and lean emptiness. Donne.

EXPRESS, adj. [from the verb.]

1. Copied; resembling; exactly like.

Of his presence many a sign

Still following thee, still compassing thee round

With goodness and paternal love; his face

Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milt.

2. Plain; apparent; declared in direct terms.

There hath been some doubt whether containing in Scripture do import express setting down in plain terms; or else comprehending in such sort, that by reason we may from thence conclude all things which are necessary. Hooker.

There is not any positive law of men, whether general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation;
but the same may be taken away, if occasion serves. Hooker.

All the gazers on the skies,

Read not in fair heav'n's story

Express truth, or truer glory,

Than they might in her bright eyes. B. Jon.

3. Clear; not dubious. This seems to be no proper use.

I love to feel myself of an express and settled judgment and affection, in things of the greatest moment. More's Div. Dial.

As to the testimonies of the fathers, let them be never so express against all sorts of prayers and invocations, they hold only of such a sort of prayer. Stillingsfleet.

Where reason or scripture is express for any opinion, or action, we may receive it as of divine authority. Locke.

4. On purpose; for a particular end.

They who are not induced to believe and live as they ought, by those discoveries which God hath made in Scripture, would stand out against any evidence whatsoever; even that of a messenger sent express from the other world. Atterbury.

EXPRESS, n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A messenger sent on purpose.

The king sent an express immediately to the marquis, with all the particular informations. Clarendon.

As if expresses from all parts had come,
With fresh alarms threat'ning the fate of Rome. Dryden's Juvenal.

Upon the first moment I was discovered, the emperor had early notice of it by an express. Gulliver's Travels.

2. A message sent.

I am content my heart should be discovered to the world, without any of those popular captations which some men use in their speeches and expresses. King Charles.

3. A declaration in plain terms. Not usual.

They do not only contradict the general design and particular expresses of the gospel, but trespass against all logic and common sense. Norris.

EXPRESSIBLE, adj. [from express.]

1. That may be uttered or declared.

They had not only a memory and tradition of it in general, but even of several particular accidents of it likewise, which they handed downwards to the succeeding ages, with notes of the greatest terror expressible. Woodward's Natural History.

2. That may be drawn by squeezing or expression.

EXPRESS, n. f. [from express.]

1. The act or power of representing any thing.

There is nothing comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith a man alone is endowed, as with an instrument suitable to the excellency of his soul, for the communication of his thoughts. Heldor on Speech.

2. The form or mode of language in which any thoughts are uttered.

But ill expression sometimes give alloy

To noble thoughts, whose flame shall ne'er decay. Buckingham.

The poet to reconcile Helen to his reader, brings her in as a penitent, condemning her own infidelity in very strong expressions. Broom.

3. A phrase; a mode of speech.

4. The act of squeezing or forcing out any thing by a press.

Those juices that are so fleshy, as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink by mixture of water. Bacon.

The juices of the leaves are obtained by expression:
from this juice proceeds the taste. Arbut. on Ali.

EXPRESSIVE, adj. [from express.] Having the power of utterance or representation. With of before the thing expressed.

Each verse so swells expressive of her woes,
And ev'ry tear in lines so mournful flows,
We, spite of fame, her fate revers'd believe,
O'erlook her crimes, and think she ought to live. Tickell.

And four fair queens, whose hands sustain a flower,

Th' expressive emblem of their foster pow'r. Pope.
A visible and exemplary obedience to God's laws is the most expressive acknowledgment of the majesty and sovereignty of God, and disposes others to glorify him by the same observances. Rogers.

EXPRESSIVELY, adv. [from expressive.] In a clear and representative way.

EXPRESSIVENESS, n. f. [from expressive.] The power of expression, or representation by words.

The murrain has all the expressiveness that words can give: it was here that Virgil strained hard to outdo Lucretius. Addison.

EXPRESSLY, adv. [from express.] In direct terms; plainly; clearly; not by implication; not generally.

It doth not follow, that of necessity we shall sin, unless we expressly extend this in every particular. Hooker.

Articles of belief, and things which all men must do, to the end they may be saved, are either expressly set down in Scripture, or else plainly thereby to be gathered. Hooker.

Who dare cross 'em,
Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly? Shakespeare.

The beginning of the worship of images in these western parts, was by the folly and superstition of the people, expressly against the will of their own bishop. Stillingsfleet.

This account I expressly give of them, when I enter on the argument. Atterbury.

All the duties that the best political laws join,
as conducive to the quiet and order of social life,
are expressly commanded by our religion. Rogers.

EXPRESSURE, n. f. [from express. Now disused.]

1. Expression; utterance. Not used.

There is a mystery in the soul of state,
Which hath an operation more divine,

Than breath or pen can give expressure to. Shakspeare.

2. The form; the likeness represented. Not used.

I will drop some obscure epistles of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the manner of his gait, the expressure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself personated. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

3. The mark; the impression. Not used.

And nightly, meadow fairies, look you sing,
Like to the garter-compas in a ring;

Th' expression that it bears, green let it be,

More fertile fresh than all the field to see. Shakspeare.

To EXPROBRATE, v. a. [from exprobra, Latin.]

To charge upon with reproach; to impute openly with blame; to upbraid.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induces the providence of flocks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.

EXPROBRATION, n. f. [from exprobrate.] Scornful charge; reproachful accusation; act of upbraiding.

The goodness we glory in, is to find out somewhat whereby we may judge others to be ungodly;
each other's fault we observe as matter of exprobration, not of grief. Hooker.

The Parthians, with exprobration of Crassus's thrift after money, poured gold into his mouth
after he was dead. Abbot.

EXP

EXP

It will be a denial with scorn, with a taunting exprobration; and to be miserable without commiseration, is the height of misery. South's Sermons.

No need such boasts, or exprobrations, false
Of cowardice: the military mound

The British files transcend in evil hour
For their proud foes. Phillips.

To EXPROPRIATE, v. a. [from ex and proprius, Latin.]

To make no longer our own; to hold no longer as a property. Not in use.

When you have resigned, or rather consigned, your expropriated will to God, and thereby entrusted him to will for you, all his dispensations towards you are, in effect, the acts of your own will. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

To EXPUGN, v. a. [from expugno, Latin.] To conquer; to take by assault.

EXPUGNATION, n. f. [from expugno.] Conquest;

The expugnation of Vienna he could never accomplish. Sandys.

To EXPULSE, v. a. [from expulso, Latin.] To drive out; to expel; to force away.

For ever should they be expuls'd from France,
And not have title of an earldom there. Shakspeare.

Suppose a nation where the custom were, that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers and mothers out of possessions, and put them to their penions. Bacon's Holy War.

Inwardly received, it may be very diuretick,
and expulse the stone in the kidneys. Brown.

Diety relates, that Peleus was expuls'd from his kingdom by Acastus. Broom.

EXPULSION, n. f. [from expulso.]

1. The act of expelling or driving out.

A wooer,
More hateful than the foul expulsion is
Of thy dear husband. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Sole victor from th' expulsion of his foes,
Messiah his triumphal chariot turn'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Others think it possible to contrive several pieces of steel and a load-stone, that, by their continual attraction and expulsion of one another, they may cause a perpetual revolution of a wheel. Wilkins's Deedalus.

This magnificent temple was not finished 'till after the expulsion of Tarquin. Stillingsfleet.

Coffee-coloured urine proceeds from a mixture of a small quantity of blood with the urine; but often prognosticates a resolution of the obstructing matter, and the expulsion of gravel or a stone. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. The state of being driven out.

To what end had the angel been sent to keep the entrance into Paradise, after Adam's expulsion, if the universe had been Paradise? Raleigh's Hist.

EXPULSIVE, adj. [from expulso.] Having the power of expulsion.

If the member be dependent, by raising of it up,
and placing it equal with, or higher than the rest of the body, the influx may be restrained, and the part strengthened by expulsive bandages. Wise's Surgery.

EXPUNCTION, n. f. [from expungere.] Abolition;
the act of expunging, blotting, or effacing.

To EXPUNGE, v. a. [from expungo, Latin.]

1. To blot out; to rub out.

The difference of the denarius and drachm having been done in the manuscript, it was needless to expunge it. Arbutnot.

Neither do they remember the many alterations, additions and expungings made by great authors in those treatises which they prepare for the publick. Swift.

2. To efface; to annihilate.

Wilt thou not to a broken heart dispense
The balm of mercy, and expunge th' offence? Sandys.

Deduct what is but vanity, or dross,
Or learning's luxury, or idleness,

Or tricks to shew the stretch of human brain
More curious pleasure, or ingenious pain;

Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrement parts
Of all, our vices have created arts: The

Then see how little the remaining sum,
Which serv'd the past, and must the times to come!

EXPURGATION. n. f. [expurgatio, Latin.]

1. The act of purging or cleansing.
All the intestines, but especially the great ones, kidneys and ureters, serve for expurgation.

2. Purification from bad mixture, as of error or falsehood.

Wife men know, that arts and learning want expurgation; and if the course of truth be permitted to itself, it cannot escape many errors.

EXPURGATOR. n. f. One who corrects by expunging.

They may well be allowed an expurgator.

EXPURGATORY. adj. [expurgatorius, Lat.] Employed in purging away what is noxious: as, the expurgatory index of the Romanists directs the abolition or expunction of passages admitted by any authors contrary to popery.

There wants expurgatory animal versions, whereby we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities; and having once a conceded list, we might with more safety attempt their reasons.

EXQUISITE. adj. [exquisite, Latin.]

1. Parfought; excellent; consummate; complete.

His absolute exactness they imitate by tending unto that which is most exquisite in every particular.

Why should the state be troubled with this needless charge of keeping and maintaining for great a navy in such exquisite perfection and readiness?

Adam and Eve, before the fall, were a different species; and none but a poet of the most unbounded invention, and the most exquisite judgment, could have fitted their conversation and behaviour to their state of innocence.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished by beasts in a more exquisite degree than they are by men; for they taste them sincere and pure, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them.

2. Confumately bad.

With exquisite malice they have mixed the gall and vinegar of falsity and contempt.

3. Very sensibly felt.

The scales of the scarf-skin hinder objects from making too painful and exquisite impression on the nerves.

EXQUISITELY. adv. [exquisitely, Latin.] Perfectly; completely: in either a good or ill sense.

We see more exquisitely with one eye shut than with both open; for that the spirits visual unite themselves, and become stronger.

A collection of rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick, and fought in the most remote parts by Epenius, the most excellent linguist.

The soldier then, in Grecian arts unskill'd,
Returning rich with plunder from the field,
If cups of silver or of gold be brought,
With jewels set and exquisitely wrought,
To glorious trappings strait the plate he turn'd,
And with the glittering spoil his horse adorn'd

The poetry of operas is generally as exquisitely ill
as the music is good.

EXQUISITENESS. n. f. [exquisite, Latin.] Nicety; perfection.

We suppose the superficies of the two glasses should be so exactly flat and smooth, that no air at all can come between them; and experience has informed us, that it is extremely difficult to procure from our ordinary tradesmen either glasses or marbles so much as approaching such an exquisiteness.

EXSCRIPT. n. f. [exscriptum, Latin.] A copy;
a writing copied from another.

EXSICCANT. adj. [exsiccat, Latin.] Drying; having the power to dry up.

Some are moderately moist, and require to be treated with medicines of the like nature, such as fleshy parts; others dry in themselves, yet require exsiccat, as bones.

To EXSICCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Latin.] To dry.

If in a dissolution of steel a separation of parts be made by precipitation, or exhalation, the exsiccated powder ascends not unto the loadstone.

Great heats and droughts exsiccate and waste the moisture and vegetative nature of the earth.

EXSICCATION. n. f. [from exsiccat.] The act of drying.

That which is concreted by exsiccation, or expression of humidity, will be reformed by humec-tation; as earth, dirt, and clay.

EXSICCATIVE. adj. [from exsiccat.] Having the power of drying.

EXSPURATION. n. f. [exspuo, Latin.] A discharge of saliva by spitting.

EXSUTION. n. f. [exsugo, Latin.] The act of fucking out, or draining out, without immediate contact of the power sucking with the thing sucked.

If you open the valve, and force up the fucker, after this first exsuction, you will drive out almost a whole cylinder full of air.

EXSUDATION. n. f. [from exsudo, Latin.] A sweating out; and extillation: an emission.

They seemed to be made by an exsudation, or ex-tillation of some petrifying juices out of the rocky earth.

To EXSUDULATE. v. a. [a word peculiar to Shakspeare.] To whisper; to buzz in the ear:
from the Italian verb sussolare.

Excuse me for a goat,
When I'll all turn the business of my soul
To such a exsudate and blown surmises.

EXSUFFLATION. n. f. [ex and sufflo, Latin.]
A blast working underneath.

Of volatility, the utmost degree is when it will fly away without returning: the next is when it will fly up, but with ease return: the next is when it will fly upwards over the helm, by a kind of exsufflation, without vapouring.

To EXSUSCITATE. v. a. [exsuscito, Latin.] To rouse up; to stir up.

EXTANCY. n. f. [from extant.]

1. The state of rising above the rest.

2. Parts rising up above the rest; in opposition to those depressed.

The order of the little extancies, and consequently that of the little depressions, will be altered likewise.

EXTANT. adj. [extans, Latin.]

1. Standing out to view; standing above the rest.

That part of the teeth which is extant above the gums is naked, and not invested with that sensible membrane called perioosteum, wherewith the other bones are covered.

If a body have part of it extant, and part of it immersed in fluid, then so much of the fluid as is equal in bulk to the immersed part shall be equal in gravity to the whole.

2. Publick; not suppressed.

The first of the continued weekly bills of mortality, extant at the parish clerks hall, begins the twenty-ninth of December 1603.

EXTANTICAL. } adj. [extant, Latin.] See ECSTA-TICAL. } cy.

I find in me a great deal of extant love, which continually carries me to good without myself.

2. Rapturous; in a state in which the soul seems to leave the body.

In trance extant may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round.

EXTEMPORAL. adj. [extemporalis, Latin.]

1. Uttered without premeditation; quick; ready; sudden.

Alcidimus the sophister hath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excelleth premeditated speech.

A man of pleasant and popular conversation, of good extemporal judgment and discourse, for the satisfying of publick ministers.

2. Speaking without premeditation.

Many foolish things fall from wise men, if they speak in haste, or be extemporal.

EXTEMPORALLY. adv. [from extemporal.]
Quickly; without premeditation.

The quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present

Our Alexandrian revels.

EXTEMPORANEUS, adj. [extemporaneus, Lat.]
Without premeditation; sudden.

EXTEMPORARY. adj. [extemporarius, Latin.]
Uttered or performed without premeditation;
sudden; quick.

This custom was begun by our ancestors out of an ambition of shewing their extemporary ability of speaking upon any subject.

That men should confer at very distant removes by an extemporary intercourse, is another reputed impossibility.

They write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extemporary expletives.

EXTEMPORE. adv. [extempore, Latin.]

1. Without premeditation; suddenly; readily;
without any previous care or preparation.

You may do it extempore; for it is but roaring.

Nothing great ought to be ventured upon without preparation; but, above all, how foolish is it to engage extempore, where the concern is eternity?

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective, but very improperly.

I have known a woman branch out into a long extempore dissertation upon a petticoat.

EXTEMPORINESS. n. f. [from extempore.] The faculty of speaking or acting without premeditation; the state of being unprepared.

To EXTEMPORIZE. v. n. [from extempore.] To speak extempore, or without premeditation.

The extemporizing faculty is never more out of its element than in the pulpit; though even here, it is much more excusable in a sermon than in a prayer.

To EXTEND. v. a. [extendo, Latin.]

1. To stretch out towards any part.

See the figure of his lifeless friend,
And his old fire, his helpless hand extend.

Should'ring God's altar a vile image stands,
Belies his features, nay extends his hands.

2. To amplify; opposed to contract.

It is sufferable in any to use what liberty they list in their own manner of writing; but the contracting and extending the lines and sense of others would appear a thankless office.

3. To spread abroad; to diffuse; to expand.

He much magnifies the capacity of his understanding, who persuades himself that he can extend his thoughts farther than God exists, or imagine any expansion where he is not.

4. To widen to a large comprehension.

Few extend their thoughts towards universal knowledge.

5. To stretch into assignable dimensions; to make local; to magnify so as to fill some assignable space.

The mind, say they, while you sustain
To hold her station in the brain;
You grant, at least she is extended,
Ergo the whole dispute is ended,

6. To enlarge; to continue.

To Helen's bed the gods alone assign Hermione t' extend the regal line. Pope's Odyssey.

7. To encrease in force or duration.

If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion:
Feed and regard him not. Shakespeare's Macb.

The eyes of Tobit carrying in themselves some action of their own, were additionally promoted by that power which can extend their natures into production of effects, beyond created efficiencies.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

8. To enlarge the comprehension of any position.

Seeing it is not set down how far the bounds of his speech concerning dissimilitude reach, who can assure us that it extendeth farther than to those things only wherein the nations were idolatrous?
Hobbes.

9. To impart; to communicate.

Let there be none to extend mercy unto him.
Psalms.

10. To seize by a course of law.

The law, that fetters all you do,
And marries where you did but woo;
And if it judge upon your side,
Will soon extend her for your bride;
And put her person, goods or lands,
Or which you like best, int' your hands. Hud.
To EXTEND v. n. To reach to any distance.
My goodness extendeth not to thee. Psalms.
The bigness of such a church ought to be no greater than that unto which the voice of a preacher of a middling lungs can easily extend.
Grant.

EXTENDER. n. f. [from extend.] The person or instrument by which any thing is extended.

The extension made, the extenders are to be loosened gently. Wise man's Surgery.

EXTENDIBLE. adj. [from extend.]
1. Capable of extension; capable to be made wider or longer.

Tubes, recently made of fluids, are easily lengthened; such as have often suffered force, grow rigid, and hardly extendible.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. That may be seized by law.

EXTENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from extend.] Unlimited extension. In this sense it is once found;
but, I think, with little propriety.

Certain molecule feminales must keep the world from an infinitude and extend finis of excursions every moment into new figures and animals.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

EXTENSIBILITY. n. f. [from extendible.] The quality of being extensible.

In what manner they are mixed, so as to give a fibre extensibility, who can say?
Grew's Cusynologia Sacra.

EXTENSIBLE. adj. [from extensio, Latin.]
1. Capable of being stretched into length or breadth.

The malleous being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inward. Holder.

2. Capable of being expanded on a larger comprehension.

That love is blind, is extensible beyond the object of poetry. Chamville.

EXTENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from extensibilis.] Capacity of being extended.

EXTENSION. n. f. [from extensio, Latin.]

1. The act of extending.

2. The state of being extended.

The hicough cometh of fulness of meat, especially in children, which causeth an extension of the stomach. Bacon.

All rest satisfied at the postures of moderation, and none endure the extremity of flexure or extension. Brown.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters, or extension of it above the waters, doth agree to the antediluvian earth. Barnet's Theory of the Earth.

By this idea of solidity is the extension of body distinguished from the extension of space: the extension of body being nothing but the cohesion or continuity of solid, separable, moveable parts;

and the extension of space, the continuity of un-solid, inseparable, and immovable parts. Locke.

EXTENSIONAL. adj. [from extension.] Long drawn out; having great extent.

You run into these extensional phantasms, which I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wrigglings up and down of pismires.
More's Divine Dialogues.

EXTENSIVE. adj. [from extensus, Latin.]

1. Wide; large.

I would not be understood to recommend to all a pursuit of those sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns have advanced them.
Watson the Mind.

2. That may be extended. Not used.

Silver beaters chuse the finest coin, as that which is most extensive under the hammer. Boyle.

EXTENSIVELY. adv. [from extensive.] Widely; largely.

'Tis impossible for any to pass a right judgment concerning them, without entering into most of these circumstances, and surveying them extensively, and comparing and balancing them all aright.
Watts on the Mind.

EXTENSIVENESS. n. f. [from extensive.]

1. Largeness; diffusiveness; wideness.

As we have reason to admire the excellency of this contrivance, so have we to applaud the exten-siveness of the benefit. Government of the Tongue.

An extensiveness of understanding and a large memory are of service, Watts's Logic.

2. Possibility to be extended.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatibility or extensiveness of the throats and gullets of serpents:
I myself have taken two entire adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray on the Creation.

EXTENSOR. n. f. [Latin.] The muscle by which any limb is extended.

Extensors are muscles so called, which serve to extend any part. Quincy.

Civil people had the flexors of the head very strong; but in the insolent there was a great over-balance of strength in the extensors of the neck.
Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

EXTENT. participle from extend. Extended.

Not used.

Both his hands most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And fair'd to wash themselves incessantly. Spenser.

EXTENT. n. f. [from extensus, Latin.]

1. Space or degree to which any thing is extended.

If I mean to reign
David's true heir, and his full sceptre sway
To just extent over all Israel's fons.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Bulk; size; compass.

The serpent, subtlest beast of all the field,
Of huge extent sometimes. Milton.

Ariana, of Darius' race,
That rul'd th' extent of Asia. Glover.

3. Communication; distribution.

An emperor of Rome
Troubled, confronted thus, and for th' extent,
Of equal justice us'd with such contempt. Shakespeare.

4. Execution; seizure.

Let my officers
Make an extent upon his house and land,
And turn him going. Shakespeare. As you like it.

To EXTENUATE. v. a. [from extenuo, Latin.]

1. To lessen; to make small or slender in bulk.

His body behind his head becomes broad, from whence it is again extenuated all the way to the tail.
Grew's Museum.

2. To lessen; to diminish in any quality.

To persist
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Shakespeare.

But fortune there extenuates the crime;
What's vice in me, is only mirth in him.
Dryden's Juvenal.

3. To lessen; to degrade; to diminish in honour.

Righteous are thy decrees on all thy works;
Who can extenuate thee? Milton's Par. Lost.

4. To lessen in representation; to palliate;
opposite to aggravate.

When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me, as I am: nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice. Shakespeare. Othello.

Upon his examination he denied little of that wherewith he was charged, nor endeavoured much to excuse or extenuate his fault; so that, not very wisely thinking to make his offence less by confession, he made it enough for condemnation.
Bacon.

Yet hear me, Sampson, not that I endeavour
To lessen or extenuate my offence. Milton's Agonist.

5. To make lean.

6. To make rare; opposed to dense.

The race of all things here is to extenuate and turn things to be more pneumatical and rare, and not to retrograde from pneumatical to that which is dense. Bacon.

EXTENUATION. n. f. [from extenuate.]

1. The act of representing things less ill than they are; contrary to aggravation; palliation.

2. Mitigation; alleviation of punishment.

When sin is to be judged, the kindest enquiry is what deeds of charity we can alledge in extenuation of our punishment. Atterbury.

A loss of plumpness, or a general decay of muscular flesh of the whole body. Quincy.

A third sort of marasmus is an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat and dryness of the parts. Harvey on Consumptions.

EXTERIOR. adj. [from exterior, Lat.] Outward;
external; not intrinsic.

And what is faith, love, virtue, unessay'd Alone, without exterior help sustain'd? Milton.

Seraphick and common lovers behold exterior beauties, as children and astronomers consider Galileo's optick glafes. Boyle.

Father, blacker, and merrier, are words which, together with the thing they denominate, imply also something else separate and exterior to the existence of that thing. Locke.

EXTERIORLY. adv. [from exterior.] Outwardly; externally; not intrinsically.

You have slander'd nature in my form;
Which, howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fairer mind. Shakespeare.

To EXTERMINATE. v. a. [from extermio, Lat.]

To root out; to tear up; to drive away; to abolish; to destroy.

Unlucky vices, on which the exterminating lot happened to fall. Decay of Piety.

Alexander left Grecian colonies in the Indies;
but they were exterminated by Sandrocottus.
Arbutnot on Coins.

This discovery alone is sufficient, if the vices of men did not captivate their reason, to explode and exterminate rank atheism out of the world.

EXTERMINATION. n. f. [from extermio, Latin.] Destruction; excision.

The question is, how far an holy war is to be pursued, whether to displanting and extermination of people? Bacon.

EXTERMINATOR. n. f. [from extermio, Latin.]

The person or instrument by which any thing is destroyed.

To EXTERMINE. v. a. [from extermio, Latin.] To exterminate; to destroy. Not used.

If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
Were both exterminated. Shakespeare. As you like it.

EXTERNS. adj. [from exterus, Latin.]

1. External; outward; visible.

When my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. Without itself; not inherent; not intrinsic;
not depending on itself.

When two bodies are pressed one against another, the rare body not being so able to resist division as the dense, and being not permitted to retire back, by reason of the extern violence impelling

ing it, the parts of the rare body must be seivered.

Digby.

EXTERNAL. adj. [externus, Latin.]

1. Outward; not proceeding from itself; operating or acting from without; opposite to internal.

We come to be assured that there is such a being, either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause, and which we cannot attribute to any other but such as we conceive God to be.

Tillotson.

Shells being exposed loose upon the surface of the earth to the injuries of weather, to be trod upon by horses and other cattle, and to many other external accidents, are, in tract of time, broken to pieces.

Woodward.

2. Having the outward appearance; having to the view or outward perception any particular nature.

Adam was then no less glorious in his externals: he had a beautiful body as well as an immortal soul.

South.

He that commits only the external act of idolatry is as guilty as he that commits the external act of theft.

Stillington.

EXTERNALLY. adv. [from external.] Outwardly.

The exterior ministry, externally and alone, hath in it nothing excellent, as being destitute of the sanctity that God requires, and it is common to wicked men and good.

Taylor.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

EXTRAVASA'TION. n. f. [from extravasated.] The act of forcing, or state of being forced out of the proper containing vessels.

Aliment, too viscous, obstructing the glands, and by its acrimony corroding the small vessels of the lungs, after a rupture and extravasation of blood, easily produces an ulcer.

Arbutnot.

EXTRAVASATE. adj. [extra and vena, Latin.] Let out of the veins.

That there is a magnetick way of curing wounds, by anointing the weapon; and that the wound is effected in like manner as is [the extravasate blood by the sympathetick medicine, as to matter of fact, is with circumstances of good evidence asserted.

Glauville's Scaphis.

EXTRAVE'RSION. n. f. [extra and versio, Lat.] The act of throwing out; the state of being thrown out.

Nor does there intervene heat to afford them any colour to pretend that there is made an extraversion of the sulphur, or of any of the two other supposed principles.

Boyle.

EXTRA'UGHT. part. [This is an obsolete participle from extra; as disfraght from disfract.] Extracted.

Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art extraught,

To let thy tongue detect thy baseborn heart?

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

EXTRE'ME. adj. [extremus, Latin.] This word is sometimes corrupted by the superlative termination, of which it is by no means capable, as it has in itself the superlative signification.

1. Greatest; of the highest degree.

The Lord shall smite thee with a fever, an inflammation, and extreme burning.

Deuteronomy, xxviii. 22.

They thought it the extremest of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and disorderly people.

Psalms.

EXTRE'ME. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.

EXT

Thither by harpy footed furies hal'd.

At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter chance
Of fierce extremes, extremes by chance more fierce;
From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round
Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire.

Milton.

Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of such

Who fill are pleas'd too little, or too much.

They cannot bear that human nature, which, they know to be imperfect, should be raised in an extreme, without opposition.

Pope's Essay on Homer.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other extremity.

The true Protestant religion is situated in the golden mean; the enemies unto her are the extremes on either hand.

Bacon.

The syllogistical form only shews, that if the intermediate idea agrees with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, then those two remote ones, or, as they are called, extremes, do certainly agree.

Locke.

EXTRE'MELY. adv. [from extreme.]

1. In the utmost degree.

She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice! but so suppressed with a kind of whispering note, that he could not conceive the words distinctly.

7. The most aggravated state.

The world is running mad after farce, the extremity of bad poetry; or rather the judgement that is fallen upon dramatic writing.

Dryden's Pref. Cleom.

TO EXTRICATE. v. a. [extrico, Latin.] To disentangle; to set free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.

We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of.

Locke.

These are reliefs to nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs, of her vessels.

Addison.

EXTRICATION. n. f. [from extricate.] The act of disentangling; disentangling.

Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as predominates in brine; and it does not appear, that this acid spirit did as such pre-exist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been made rather by transmutation than extrication.

Boyle.

EXTRINSICAL. adj. [extrinsecus, Latin.] External; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsic. It is commonly written so, but analogy requires extrinsecal.

A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsecal agent: absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself.

Digby on Bodies.

Neither is the atom by an extrinsecal impulse diverted from its natural course.

Ray on the Creation.

Outward objects, that are extrinsecal to the mind; and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsic, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the origin of all knowledge.

Locke.

EXTRINSICALLY. adv. [from extrinsecal.] From without.

If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advenient, be an error, almost all the world hath been mistaken.

Glauv.

EXTRINSICK. adv. [extrinsecus, Latin.] Outward; external.

When they cannot shake the main fort, they try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his most extrinsecal adherents.

Government of the Tongue.

Extrinsecal modes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself; but it is a manner of being which some substances attain, by reason of something external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated.

Watts's Logic.

TO EXTRU'CT. v. a. [extruo, extruam, Lat.] To build; to raise; to form into structure.

EXTRU'CTOR. n. f. [from extruere.] A builder; a fabricator; a contriver.

That the saliva hath a virtue of macerating bodies, appears by the effects in taking away warts, sometimes exulcerating the jaws, and rotting the teeth. Ray on the Creation.

The stagnating cerum turning acrimonious, exulcerates and putrifies the bowels. Arbuth. on Diet.

2. To afflict; to corrode; to enrage.

Thoughts, my tormentors, arm'd with deadly stings,

Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb Or medicinal liquor can assuage. Milton's Agonistes.

EYE

EXULCERATION. n. f. [from exulcero.]

1. The beginning erosion, which wears away the substance and forms the ulcer. Quincy.

2. Exacerbation; corrosion.

This exulceration of mind made him apt to take all occasions of contradiction. Hooker.

EXULCERATORY. adj. [from, ulcerate.] Having a tendency to cause ulcers.

To EXULT. v. n. [exulto, Latin.] To reject above measure; to triumph; to be in high exaltation of gladness.

The whole world did seem to exult that it had occasion of pouring out gifts to so blessed a purpose. Hooker.

Who might be your mother,
That you insult, exult, and rail, at once
Over the wretched? Shakspeare. As you like It.

EXULTANCE. n. f. [from exult.] Transport; joy; triumph; gladness; exaltation.

We have great cause of exultance and joy, God's service being the most perfect freedom. Government of the Tongue.

EXULTATION. n. f. [exultatio, Latin.] Joy; triumph; rapturous delight.

Good effects may grow in each of the people towards other, in them all towards their pastor, and in their pastor towards every of them; between whom there daily and interchangeably pass, in the hearing of God himself, and in the presence of his holy angels, so many heavenly acclamations, exultations, provocations, petitions. Hooker.

Devotion inspires men with sentiments of religious gratitude, and swells their hearts with inward transports of joy and exultation. Addison's Freeholder.

To EXUNDATE. v. n. [exundo, Lat.] To overflow. Dict.

EXUNDA'TION. n. f. [from exundate.] Overflow; abundance.

Here comes little Robin.—How now, my eyasmusket; what news with you? Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

EYE. n. f. obsolete plural eyes, now eyes. [auge, Gothick; eg, Saxon; oeg, Dutch; es, Scottish, plur. eyes.]

1. The organ of vision; the medium of the sense of sight.

Good fir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof off the easier. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Vouchsafe, bright moon, and these thy stars to shine,

Those clouds remov'd upon our watry eyes. Shakspeare.

EYE

Nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself,
Not going from itself; but eyes opposed,
Salute each other with each other's form.

Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida.
He kept him as the apple of his eye.

Deuteronomy, xxxii. 10.
As long looking against the sun or fire hurteth the eye by dilatation; so curious printing in small volumes, and reading of small letters, do hurt the eye by contraction. Bacon.

His awful presence did the crowd surprize,
Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;
Eyes that confest d'him born for kingly sway,
So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day.

Dryden's Knight's Tale.
But sure the eye of time beholds no name
So blest as thine in all the rolls of fame.

Pope's Odyssey.
2. Sight; ocular knowledge.

Who hath bewitched you, that you should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth? Galatians, iii. 1.

3. Look; countenance.

I'll say you grey is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shakspeare.

4. Front; face.

To justify this worthy nobleman,
Her shall you hear disproved to your eyes. Shakspeare.

5. A posture of direct opposition, where one thing is in the same line with another.

Now pass'd, on either side they nimble tack,
Both strive to intercept and guide the wind;
And in its eye more closely they come back,
To finish all the deaths they left behind. Dryden.

6. Aspect; regard.

Having an eye to a number of rites and orders in the church of England, as marrying with the ring; sundry church-offices, dignities, and callings, for which they found no commandment in the holy Scripture, they thought by the one only stroke of an axion to have cut them off. Hooker.

As in Scripture a number of laws, particular and positive, being in force, may not by any law of man be violated; we are, in making laws, to have thereunto an especial eye. Hooker.

The man that is tender among you, and very delicate, his eyes shall not be evil towards his brother. Deuteronomy.

He that hath a bountiful eye shall be blessed. Proverbs.

None should be put into either of those commissions, with an eye of favour to their persons, to give them countenance or reputation in the places where they live. Bacon in Villiers.

These are intrinsic difficulties arising from the text itself, as the uncertainty sometimes who are the persons he speaks to, or the opinions or practices which he has in his eye. Locke.

Winds and hurricanes at land, tempests and storms at sea, have always been looked upon with as evil an eye as earthquakes. Woodward's Natural History.

Several performances have been justly applauded for their wit, which have been written with an eye to this predominant humour of the town. Addison's Freeholder.

We were the most obedient creatures in the world, constant to our duty, and kept a steady eye on the end for which we were sent hither. Speke.

In this disposal of my sister, I have had an eye to her being a wit, and provided that the bridegroom be a man of sound judgment. Tatler.

Booksellers mention with respect the authors they have printed, and consequently have an eye to their own advantage. Addison's Spectator.

Not satisfied with our oath, he appointed a band of horsemen to have an eye that we should not go beyond the appointed limits. Sidney.

Lawmakers must have an eye to the place where, and to the men amongst whom. Hooker.

His majesty hath cast his eyes upon you, as finding you to be such as you should be, or hoping to make you to be such as he would have you to be. Bacon.

E

If the English had driven the Irish into the open countries, where they might have an eye and observation upon them, the Irish had been easily kept in order.

Spenser has followed both Virgil and Theocritus in the charms which he employs for curing Britomartis of her love; but he had also our poet's Ceyx in his eye.

Misdoubt my constancy; and do not try;

But stay and ever keep me in your eye

After this jealousy he kept a strict eye upon him.

This method of teaching children by a repeated practice, under the eye and direction of the tutor, till they have got the habit of doing well, has many advantages.

8. Opinion formed by observation.

She told her husband, she designed to be beautiful in no body's eye but his.

It hath, in their eye, no great affinity with the form of the church of Rome.

Like one of two contending in a prize, That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes.

I was as far from meditating a war, as I was, in the eye of the world, from having any preparations for one.

Though he in all the people's eyes seem'd great, Yet greater he appear'd in his retreat.

9. Sight; view; the place in which any thing may be seen.

There shall he practise tilts and tournaments, Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen;

And be, in eye of every exercise, Worthy his youth and nobleness of birth.

10. Any thing formed like an eye.

We see colours like the eye of a peacock's feather, by pressing our eyes on either corner, whilst we look the other way.

11. Any small perforation.

This Ajax has not so much wit as will stop the eye of Helen's needle.

Does not our Saviour himself speak of the intolerable difficulty which they cause in men's passage to heaven? Do not they make the narrow way much narrower, and contract the gate which leads to life to the tightness of a needle's eye?

12. A small catch into which a hook goes.

Those parts, if they cohere to one another but by rest only, may be much more easily dissociated, and put into motion by any external body, than they could be, if they were by little hooks and eyes, or other kind of fastenings entangled in one another.

13. Bud of a plant.

Prune and cut off all your vine-shoots to the very root, save one or two of the stoutest, to be left with three or four eyes of young wood.

4. A small shade of colour.

The ground indeed is tawny.

—With an eye of green in't.

Red with an eye of blue, makes a purple.

5. Power of perception.

The eyes of your understanding being enlightened.

A gift doth blind the eyes of the wife.

To EYE. v. a. [from the noun.] To watch; to keep in view; to observe; to look on; to gaze on.

When they are laid in garrison, they may better hide their defaults than when they are in camp, where they are continually eyed and noted of all men.

Full many a lady

I've eyed with best regard.

Her richest lockram 'bout her reeky neck,

Clamb'ring the walls to eye him.

Modest as morning, when the coldy eyes

The youthful Phœbus.

Bold deed thou hast presum'd, advent'rous Eve, And peril great provok'd, who thus hath dar'd, Had it been only coveting to eye That sacred fruit.

Such a story as the basilisk is that of the wolf, concerning priority of vision, that a man becomes hoarse and dumb, if the wolf have the advantage first to eye him.

It was needful for the hare perpetually to eye her pursuing enemy.

Then gave it to his faithful squire,

With lessons how t' observe and eye her.

Eye nature's walks, shoot folly as it flies,

And catch the manners living as they rise,

Have a box when eunuchs sing,

And foremost in the circle eye a king.

To EYE. v. n. To appear; to show; to bear an appearance. Not used.

Forgive me,

Since my becoming kill me when they do not

Eye well to you.

EV'EBALL. n. f. [eye and ball.] The apple of the eye; the pupil.

Be subject to no fight but mine: invincible

To every eyeball else.

I feel my hair grow stiff, my eyeballs rowl;

This is the only form could shake my soul.

Not when a gilt buffet's reflected pride

Turns you from sound philosophy aside,

Not when from plate to plate your eyeballs roll,

And the brain dances to the mantling bowl.

EYEBRIGHT. n. f. [cupbrasia, Lat.] A plant, called by Milton Euphrasia.

EV'EBROW. n. f. [eye and brow.] The hairy arch over the eye.

The lover,

Sighing like a furnace, with a woful ballad

Made to his mistress' eyebrow.

On the seventh day he shall shave all his hair off his head, his beard, and his eyebrows.

Above stand the eyebrows, to keep any thing from running down upon the eyes; as drops of sweat from the forehead, or dust.

The balls of his broad eyes roll'd in his head,

And glar'd betwixt a yellow and a red;

He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,

And o'er his eyebrows hung his matted hair.

EYED. adj. [from eye.] Having eyes: used in composition.

Some reliques of the true antiquity,

Though disfigured, a well eyed man

May happily discover.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,

To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield

To Christian intercessors.

EYEDROP. n. f. [eye and drop.] Tear.

That tyranny which never quaff but blood,

Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife

With gentle eyedrops.

EY'EGANCE. n. f. [eye and glance.] Quick notice of the eye.

His countenance was bold, and bashed not

For Guyon's looks; but scornful eyegance at him shot.

EY'EGLOSS. n. f. [eye and glass.] Spectacles;

glasses to assist the sight.

Ha' not you seen Camillo?

But that's past doubt you have; or your eyeglass

Is thicker than a cuckold's horn.

By comparing it with a good perspective of four foot in length, made with a concave eyeglass, I could read at a greater distance with my own instrument than with the glass.

EY'ELASH. n. f. [eye and lash.] The line of hair that edges the eyelid.

EY'ELESS. adj. [from eye.] Wanting eyes;

fightless; deprived of sight.

A proclaim'd prize! most happy!

That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh

To raise my fortunes.

To raise my fortunes.

To raise my fortunes.

To raise my fortunes.

To raise my fortunes.

To raise my fortunes.

To raise my fortunes.

To raise my fortunes.

To raise my fortunes.

To raise my fortunes.

To raise my fortunes.

To raise my fortunes.

Promise was, that I Should Israel from Philistian yoke deliver: Ask for this great deliverer now, and find him Eyeless in Gaza, at the mill with slaves.

Pentheus durst deride The cheated people, and the eyeless guide.

Poor eyeless pilgrim.

Cyclop, if any pitying thy disgrace,

Ask who disfigur'd thus that eyeless face.

EV'ELLET. [n. f. aillet, French, a little eye.] A hole through which light may enter; any small perforation for a lace to go through.

Slitting the back and fingers of a glove, I made eyelid holes to draw it close.

EV'ELID. n. f. [eye and lid.] The membrane that shuts over the eye.

Mark when the smiles with amiable cheer,

And tell me whereto can ye liken it!

When on each eyelid sweetly do appear

An hundred graces as in shade to fit.

On my eyelids is the shadow of death.

Fetch me that flower; the herb I shew'd thee

once;

The juice of it, on sleeping eyelids laid,

Will make or man or woman madly doat

Upon the next live creature that it sees.

The Turks have a black powder made of a mineral called alcohol, which with a fine long pencil

they lay under their eyelids, which doth colour

black, whereby the white of the eye is set off more white.

At length, the crackling noise and dreadful blaze

Call'd up some waking lover to the fight;

And long it was ere he the rest could raise,

Whose heavy eyelids yet were full of night.

EY'ESERVANT. n. f. [eye and servant.] A servant that works only while watched.

EY'ESERVICE. n. f. [eye and service.] Service performed only under inspection.

Servants, obey in all things your masters; not with eyeservice, as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart.

EV'ESHOT. n. f. [eye and shot.] Sight; glance;

view.

I must not think of sharing the booty before I am free from danger, and out of eyeshot from the other windows.

I have preserved many a young man from her eyeshot by this means.

EY'EIGHT. n. f. [eye and fight.] Sight of the eye.

The Lord hath recompensed me according to my cleanness in his eyefight.

Metinks I see thee, now thou art below,

As one dead in the bottom of a tomb;

Either my eyefight fails, or thou look'st pale.

Though fight be lost,

Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd

Where other senses want not their delights,

At home in leisure and domestic ease,

Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eyefight exposes daily men abroad.

Josephus sets this down from his own eyefight, being himself a chief captain at the siege of Jopa-ta, where these events happened.

He blinds the wife, gives eyefight to the blind,

And molds and stamps anew the lover's mind.

EV'SORE. n. f. [eye and sore.] Something offensive to the sight.

Hath the church of Christ, from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always tied itself to end neither fer-mon, nor almost any speech of moment, which bath concerned matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity, which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of

Vol. I. N° 17.

Mortimer.

EX'ETOOTH. n. f. [eye and tooth.] The tooth on the upper jaw next on each side to the grinders;
the fang.

The next tooth on each side stronger and deeper rooted, and more pointed, called canini, in English eyeteeth, to tear the more tough sort of aliments. Ray on the Creation.

EX'EWINK. n. f. [eye and wink.] A wink, as a hint or token.

They would have won any woman's heart; and,
I warrant you, they could never get an eyewink of her. Shakespeare.

EYEWITNESS. n. f. [eye and witness.] An ocular evidence; one who gives testimony to facts seen with his own eyes.

We made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and were eyewitnesses of his majesty. 2 Peter.

To meet all his faints, who silent stood

Eyewitnesses of his almighty acts,

With jubilee advanc'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

E Y R

The curious, by laying together circumstances, attestations, and characters of those who are concerned in them, either receive or reject what at first but eyewitnesses could absolutely believe or disbelieve. Addison on the Christian Religion.

EYRE. n. f. [eyre, French; iter, Lat.] The court of justices itinerants; and justices in eyre are those only, which Bracton in many places calls justiciarios itinerantes. The eyre also of the forest is nothing but the justice-feat, otherwise called;
which is, or should, by ancient custom, be held every three years by the justices of the forest, journeying up and down for that purpose. Cowel.

EX'RY. n. f. [from ey, an egg.] The place where birds of prey build their nests and hatch.

But I was born so high,
Our eyrie buildeth in the cedars top,

And dallies with the wind, and scorns the fun. Shak.
The eagle, and the stork,

On cliffs and cedar-tops their eyries build. Milton.
Some haggard hawk, who had her eyry nigh,

Well pounc'd to fasten, and well wing'd to fly.

Dryden.

F.

F A B

F, A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Islandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

FABA'CEUS. adj. [fabaceus, Latin.] Having the nature of a bean. Dict.

FA'BLE. n. f. [fable, French; fabula, Latin.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.

Jotham's fable of the trees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addison's Spectator.

2. A fiction in general.

Triptolemus, to sung the nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
But, spite of all those fable-makers,

He never sow'd on Almaign acres. Dryden.

Palladius coming to die somewhere in the north part of Britain, may seem to give some kind of countenance to those fables that make him to have lived many years among the Scots. Lloyd.

3. A virtuous or foolish fiction.

But refuse profane and old wives fables.

Timothy, iv. 7.

4. The series or contexture of events which constitutes a poem epick or dramattick.

The moral is the first business of the poet: this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dry. Desprez.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison's Spectator.

5. A lye; a vicious falsehood. This sense is merely familiar.

It would look like a fable to report that this gentleman gives away a great fortune by secret methods. Addison.

F A B

TO FA'BLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.
That Saturn's fons receiv'd the three-fold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,

Old poets mention, fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
That wav'ring conquest still desires to rove!
In Malbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell.

2. To tell falsehoods; to lye: a familiar use.
He fables not: I hear the enemy.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

TO FA'BLE. v. a. To feign; to tell falsely.
We mean to win,

Or turn this heav'n itself into the hell
Thou fablest. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Ladies of th' Hesperides, they seem'd
Fairer than feign'd of old, or fabled since

Of fairy damsels met in forest wide,
By knights. Milton's Paradise Lost.

FA'BLEM. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.

Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!
Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Tickell.

FA'BLER. n. f. [from fable.] A dealer in fiction; a writer of feigned stories.

TO FA'BRICATE. v. a. [fabricar, Latin.]

1. To build; to construct.

2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scottish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricate.

FABRIC'ATION. n. f. [from fabricate.] The act of building; construction.

This fabrication of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth the first rudiments of the human nature.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FA'BRICK. n. f. [fabrica, Latin.]

1. A building; an edifice.

There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for beauty as strength of the fabrick. Wotton.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any

FA'BULOSITY. n. f. [fabulositas, Latin.] Fulness of feigned stories; fabulous invention.

In their fabulosity they report, that they had observations for twenty thousand years.

Abbott's Description of the World.

FA'BULOUS. adj. [fabulosus, Latin.] Feigned;
full of fables, invented tales.

A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless

Addison's Spectator.

FA'BULOUSLY. adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction;
in a fabulous manner.

There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brown's Vulg. Et.

FACE. n. f. [face, French, from facies, Latin.]

1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses's face shone.

Exodus, xxxiv. 35.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find them good;
but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon.

From beauty still to beauty ranging,
In every face I found a dart. Addison's Spectator.

2. Countenance; cast of the features; look;
air of the face.

Kick out, we set the best face on't we could.
Dryden's Virgil.

Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!
Who can't be silent, and who will not lye:

To

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

3. The surface of any thing.

A mist watered the whole face of the ground.
Genesis, ii. 6.

4. The front or forepart of any thing.

The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Ezekiel, xli. 14.

5. Visible state of affairs.

He look'd, and saw the face of things quite chang'd.

The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;

All now was turn'd to jollity and game,

To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton.

This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison.

6. Appearance; resemblance; look.

Keep still your former face, and mix again

With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with them;

For such are treasons. Ben Jonson.

At the first shock, with blood and powder
stain'd,

Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;

Fury and art produce effects so strange,

They trouble nature, and her visage change. Waller.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

7. Preference; sight; state of confrontation.

Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall slay her before her face. Numbers, xix. 3.

Jove cannot fear; then tell me to my face,

That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryd. Iliad.

8. Confidence; boldness; freedom from bashfulness or confusion.

They're thinking, by his face,

To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

How many things are there which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to suplicate or beg. Bacon.

You'll find the thing will not be done

With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that which you never lost: and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have stolen. L'Estrange.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations. Tillotson, Preface.

9. Distortion of the face.

Shame itself!

Why do you make such faces? Shakespeare's Macb.

FACE TO FACE. [An adverbial expression.]

1. When both parties are present.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have his accusers face to face. Acts, xxv. 16.

2. Nakedly; without the interposition of other bodies.

Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face. 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

TO FACE. v. a. [from the noun.]

pocrite.

Thou needs must learn to laugh, to lye,

To face, to forge, to scoff, to company. Hubbard's Tale.

2. To turn the face; to come in front.

Face about, man; a soldier, and afraid of the enemy! Dryden.

Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around
The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice refound;

Hail and farewell they shouted thrice again,
Thrice facing to the left, and thence they turn'd again. Dryden.

TO FACE. v. a.

1. To meet in front; to oppose with confidence and firmness.

I'll face

This tempest, and deserve the name of king. Dryden.

We get intelligence of the force of the enemy, and cast about for a sufficient number of troops to face the enemy in the field of battle. Addison on the War.

They are as loth to see the fires kindled in Smithfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution. Swift.

2. To oppose with impudence: commonly with down.

We trepan'd the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.

Because he walk'd against his will,
He fac'd men down that he stood still. Prior.

3. To stand opposite to.

On one side is the head of the emperor Trajan;
the reverse has on it the circus Maximus, and a view of the side of the Palatine mountain that faces
it. Addison on Italy.

The temple is described square, and the four fronts with open gates, facing the different quarters of the world. Pope.

4. To cover with an additional superficies; to invest with a covering.

The fortification of Soleurre is faced with marble. Addison.

Socrates, informed of some derogating speeches used of him behind his back, made this facetious reply, Let him beat me too when I am absent. Government of the Tongue.

FACE'TIOUSLY. adv. [from facetious.] Gaily; cheerfully; wittily; merrily.

FACE'TIOUSNESS. n. s. [from facetious.] Cheerful wit; mirth; gaiety.

FACILE. adj. [facile, French; facilis, Latin.]

1. Easy; not difficult; performable or attainable with little labour.

Then also those poets, which are now counted most hard, will be both facile and pleasant. Milton on Education.

To confine the imagination is as facile a performance as the Goteham's design of hedging in the cuckoo. Glanville.

By dividing it into parts so distinct, the order in which they shall find each disposed, will render the work facile and delightful. Evelyn's Calendar.

This may at first seem perplexed with many difficulties, yet many things may be suggested to make it more facile and commodious. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

2. Easily surmountable; easily conquerable.

The facile gates of hell too slightly barr'd. Milton.

3. Easy of access or converse; not haughty; not supercilious; not austere.

I meant the should be courteous, facile, sweet,
Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride;

I meant each softest virtue there should meet,
Fit in that softer bosom to reside. Ben Jonson.

Raphael now, to Adam's doubt propos'd,
Benevolent and facile, thus reply'd. Milton.

4. Pliant; flexible; easily persuaded to good or bad; ductile to a fault.

Too facile then, thou did'st not much gainstay;
Nay did'st permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton.

Since Adam, and his facile consort Eve Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me. Milton.

Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious fer-mon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts no longer than till somewhat else comes in their way. Calamy.

TO FACILITATE. v. a. [facilitate, French.] To make easy; to free from difficulty; to clear from impediments.

Choicest of the likeliest and best prepared metal for the version will facilitate the work. Bacon's Natural History.

They renewed their assault two or three days together, and planted cannon to facilitate their passage, which did little hurt; but they still lost many men in the attempt. Clarendon.

Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule of picture, yet it is a great succour and relief to art, and facilitates the means of execution. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

What produceth a due quantity of animal spirits, necessarily facilitates the animal and natural motions. Arbutnot on Diet.

A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and facilitate the progress of our arms in Spain. Swift.

FACILITY. n. s. [facilité, French; facilitas,
Latin.]

1. Easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.

Yet reason faith, reason should have ability
To hold these worldly things in such proportion,
As let them come or go with even facility. Sidney.

Piety could not be diverted from this to a more commodious business by any motives of profit or facility. Religion.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour; though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon's Holy War.

2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.

They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of profiting themselves by reading good authors. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The facility which we get of doing things, by custom of doing, makes them often pass in us without our notice. Locke.

3. Vitious ductility; easiness to be persuaded to good or bad; ready compliance.

Facility is worse than bribery; for bribes come now and then: but if importunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without them. Bacon.

'Tis a great error to take facility for good-nature; tenderness without discretion, is no better than a more pardonable folly. L'Estrange.

4. Easiness of access; compliance; condescension; affability.

He opens and yields himself to the man of business with difficulty and reluctance; but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of appetite and desire. South.

FACINEROUS. adj. [corrupted by Shakespeare from facinorous; facinus, facinoris, Latin.] Wicked; facinorous.

'Tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he's of a most facinerous spirit that will not acknowledge it. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

FACING. n. s. [from To Face.] An ornamental covering; that which is put on the outside of any thing by way of decoration.

These offices and dignities were but the facings and fringes of his greatness. Watson.

to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgement; we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised also throughout the world, Hooker.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done. Bacon.

Those effects which are wrought by the percussion of the sense, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat four or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination. Bacon's Natural History.

Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with two great an evidence to be denied. South's Sermons.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation. If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion. Addison on the War.

Manifold sins, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fact never fail to attend it. Smalbridge.

3. Action; deed. Unhappy man! to break the pious laws Of nature, pleading in his children's cause: Howe'er the doubtful fact is understood, 'Tis love of honour and his country's good; The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

FA'CTION. n. f. [factio, French; factio, Latin.]

1. A party in a state. The queen is valued thirty thousand strong; If she hath time to breathe, be well assur'd Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shaksp. Henry VI.

He has been known to commit outrages And cherish factions. Shakespeare's Timon. By one of Simon's faction murders were committed. Mac.

By the weight of reason I should counterpoise the overbalancing of any factions. King Charles.

2. Tumult; discord; dissension. They remained at Newbery in great faction among themselves. Clarendon.

FA'CTIONARY. f. n. [factionnaire, French.] One of a faction; a party man. A word not in use. Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius; always factionary of the party of your general. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

FA'CTIONOUS. adj. [factieux, French.] 1. Given to faction; loud and violent in a party; publicly diffidentious; addicted to form parties and raise public disturbances.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs. Shaksp. Jul. Cæsar.

2. Proceeding from public diffentions; tending to publick discord. Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd, Assemble; and harrangues are heard; but soon In factious opposition. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Factious tumults overbore the freedom and honour of the two houses. King Charles.

Why these factious quarrells, controversies, and battles amongst themselves, when they were all united in the same design? Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

FA'CTIONOUSLY. adv. [from factious.] In a manner criminally diffidentious or tumultuous.

I intended not only to oblige my friends, but mine enemies also; exceeding even the desires of those that were factiously discontented. King Charles.

FA'CTIONOUSNESS. adj. [from factious.] Inclination to publick diffention; violent clamorousness for a party.

FA'CTIOUS. adj. [factitious, Latin.] Made by art, in opposition to what is made by nature.

In the making and distilling of soap, by one degree of fire, the salt, the water, and the oil or grease, whereof that factitious concrete is made up, being boiled up together, or easily brought to incorporate. Boyle.

Hardness wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant, all other stones being exalted to that degree that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it; the factitious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on the Creation.

FA'CTOR. n. f. [facteur, French; factor, Latin.]

1. An agent for another; one who transacts business for another. Commonly a substitute in mercantile affairs.

Take on you the charge And kingly government of this your land; Not as protector, steward, substitute, Or lowly factors for another's gain. Shaksp. Richard III.

The Scots had good intelligence, having some factors doubtless at this mart, albeit they did not openly trade. Hayward.

Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some sly and venomous factors for the old republican cause. South.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged, by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sorts, sects and persuasion, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church, and that therefore they ought to be taken away. South.

Forc'd into exile from his rightful throne, He made all countries where he came his own; And viewing monarchs secret of sway, A royal factor for their kingdoms lay. Dryden.

2. [In arithmetick.] The multiplicator and multiplicand. Harris.

FA'CTORY. n. f. [from factor.]

1. A house or district inhabited by traders in a distant country.

2. The traders embodied in one place. FA'CTO'RIUM. n. f. [factotum, Latin. It is used likewise in burlesque French.] A servant employed alike in all kinds of business; as Scrub in the Stratagem.

FA'CTURE. n. f. [French.] The act or manner of making any thing.

FA'ULTY. n. f. [faute, French; faultas, Latin.]

1. The power of doing any thing; ability whether corporal or intellectual.

There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things. Hooker.

Orators may grieve; for in their sides, Rather than heads, their faculty abides. Denham.

Reason in man supplies the defect of other faculties wherein we are inferior to beasts, and what we cannot compass by force we bring about by stratagem. L'Estrange.

2. Powers of the mind, imagination, reason, memory.

I understand in the prime end Of nature, her the inferior; in the mind And inward faculties, which most excel. Milton.

In the ordinary way of speaking, the understanding and will are two faculties of the mind. Locke.

Neither did our Saviour think it necessary to explain to us the nature of God, because it would be impossible, without bestowing on us other faculties than we possess at present. Swift.

F A C

F A D

3. Mechanical power.

The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in cleaving wood. Wilkins.

4. [In physick.] A power or ability to perform any action, natural, vital, and animal: by the first they understand that by which the body is nourished, or another like it generated: the vital faculty is that by which life is preserved, and the ordinary functions of the body performed; and the animal faculty is what conducts the operations of the mind. Quincy.

5. A knack; habitual excellence; dexterity. He had none of those faculties, which the other had, of reconciling men to him. Clarendon.

Our author found out monarchical absolute power in that text, he had an exceeding good faculty to find it himself where he could not find it others. Locke.

He had an excellent faculty in preaching if he were not too refined. Swift.

6. Quality personal; disposition or habit of good or ill.

I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know My faculties nor person, yet will be The chronicles of my doing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

7. Natural virtue, efficacy. In requital ope his leathern scrip, And shew me similes of a thousand names, Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.

8. Power; authority. This Duncan Hath born his faculties so meek, hath been So clear in his great office, that his virtues Will plead like angels. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

9. Privilege; right to do any thing. Law hath set down to what persons, in what causes, with what circumstances, almost every faculty or favour shall be granted. Hooker.

10. Faculty, in an university, denotes the masters and professors of the several sciences: as, a meeting of the faculty or faculties.

Narcissus' change, to the vain virgin shows, Who trusts to beauty, trusts the fading rose. Gay's Fables.

TO FA'DE. v. a. To wear away; to reduce to languor; to deprive of freshness or vigour; to wither.

This

F A I

This is a man old, wrinkled, faded withered;
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shakesp.
His palms, though under weights they did not stand,
Still thriv'd; no Winter could his laurels fade. Dryden.

Restless anxiety, forlorn despair,
And all the faded family of care. Garth's Disp.
To FADGE. v. n. [zepezan, Sax. fagen, German.]
1. To fuit; to fit; to have one part consistent with another.

How will this fadge? my master loves her dearly,

And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to doat on me. Shakesp.
2. To agree; not to quarrel; to live in amity.

When they thriv'd they never fadg'd,
But only by the ears engag'd,
Like dogs that snarl about a bone,
And play together when they've none. Hudibras.
3. To succeed; to hit.

The fox had a fetch; and when he saw it would not fadg, away goes he presently. L'Estrange.

4. This is a mean word not now used, unless in the fagend of business, they are apt to look not kindly upon those who go before them. Collier on Envy.

FA'GOT. n. f. [fagot, Welsh and Armorick;
fagot, French.]

1. A bundle of sticks bound together for the fire.

About the pile of fagots, sticks and hay,
The bellows raised the newly kindled flame. Fairf.
Spare for no fagot, let there be enow;
Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake.

Shakespere's Henry VI.
Mitres or fagots have been the rewards of different persons, according as they pronounced these consecrated syllables or not. Watts on the Mind.

2. A bundle of sticks for any purpose.
The Black Prince filled a ditch with fagots as successfully as the generals of our times do it with fascines. Addison.

3. A soldier numbered in the muster-roll, but not really existing.

To FA'GOT. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie up;
to bundle together.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But fagot his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well. Dryd.

To FAIL. v. n. failler, French; faels, Welsh.
Pezron.

1. To be deficient; to cease from former plenty; to fall short; not to be equal to demand or use.

The waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up. Jb. xiv. 11.

Wherefore should not strength and might
There fail where virtue fails, or weakest prove Where boldest, though to fight unconquerable? Milton.

Where the credit and money fail, barter alone must do. Locke.

2. To be extinct; to cease; to be no longer produced.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men. Psalms xii. 1.

Whether such virtue spent of old now fail'd
More angels to create. Milton.

3. To cease; to perish; to be left.
By fate the strength of Gods

And this empyreal substance cannot fail. Milton.

For Titan, by the mighty loss dismay'd,
Among the heavens th' immortal fact display'd,
Left the remembrance of his grief should fail. Addison.

4. To die; to lose life.
Had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
Their heads shou'd have gone off. Shakspere Henry VIII.

Both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that is holpen shall fall down, and they all shall fail together. Isaiah xxxi. 3.

5. To sink; to be borne down; to come to an end.

Neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit should fail before me. Isaiah lviii. 16.

His works, which in our fall,
For us created, needs with us must fail, Dependent made. Milton.

6. To decay; to decline; to languish Let none henceforth seek needless cause t' ap-dove

The faith they owe; when earnestly they seek Such proof, conclude, they then begin to fail. Milton.

I perceive
Thy mortal fight to fail: objects divine
Must needs impair and weary human sense. Milton.

7. To miss; not to produce its effect.
Consider of deformity not as a sign, which is deceivable, but as a cause which seldom faileth of the effect. Bacon.

All these puissant legions, whose exile
Hath emptied heav'n, shall fail to re-ascend. Milton.

This jest was first of th' other house's making,
And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking. Dryden.

A persuasion that we shall overcome any difficulties that we meet with in the sciences, seldom fails to carry us through them. Locke.

He does not remember whether any grain came up or not; but he thinks that very few fail'd. Mortimer's Husbandry.

8. To miss; not to succeed in a design; to miscarry.

I am enjoin'd, by oath, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage. Shakspere's Merchant of Venice.

At least our envious foe hath fail'd, who thought
All like himself rebellious. Milton.

In difficulties of state, the true reason of failing proceeds from failings in the administration. L'Estrange.

Men who have been busied in the pursuit of the philosopher's stone, have failed in their design. Addison's Guardian.

9. To be deficient in duty.
Or Nature fail'd in me, and left some part
Not proof enough such object to sustain. Milton.

Endeavour to fulfill God's commands, to repent as often as you fail of it, and to hope for pardon of him. Wake.

To FAIL. v. a.
1. To desert; not to continue to assist or supply; to disappoint.

The ship was now left alone, as proud lords be when fortune fails them. Sidney.

So hast thou oft with guile thine honour blent;
But little may such guile thee now avail,
If wanted force and fortune do not much me fail. Spenser.

There shall be signs in the sun, the moon, and the stars, mens hearts failing them for fear. Luke, xxi. 26.

Nor could the muse defend
Her son, so fail not thou who thee implores. Milton.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And vent'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear. Milton.

Her heart failed her, and she would fain have compounded for her life. L'Estrange.

He presumes upon his parts that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision beforehand. Locke.

2. Not to assist; to neglect; to omit to help.

F A I

F A I

Since nature fails us in no needful thing,
Why want I means my inward self to see? Davies.

3. To omit; not to perform.
The inventive God who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit when once he warms the heart. Dryden.

4. To be wanting to.
There shall not fail thee a man on the throne. 1 Kings.

FAIL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Miscarriage; miss; unsuccessfulness.

2. Omission; non-performance.
Mark and perform it, feest thou? for the fail
Of any point in't shall not only be Death to thyself, but to thy lewd tongu'd wife. Shakspere.

the Canaanites. Jos. iii. 10.

3. Deficiency; want.

4. Death; extinction.
How grounded he his title to the crown
Upon our fail? Shakspere's Henry VIII.

FAILING. n. f. [from fail.] Deficiency; imperfection; fault not atrocious; lapse.

Besides what failings may be in a matter, even in the expressions there must often be great obsecurities. Digby.

To failings mild, but zealous for desert;
The clearest head and the sincerest heart. Pope.

Even good men have many temptations to subdue, many conflicts with those enemies which war against the soul, and many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.

FAILURE. n. f. [from fail.]
1. Deficiency; cessation.

There must have been an universal failure and want of springs and rivers all the summer season. Woodward.

2. Omission; non-performance; slip.

He that, being subject to an apoplexy, used still to carry his remedy about him; but upon a time shifting his clothes, and not taking that with him, chanced upon that very day to be surpris'd with a fit: he owed his death to a mere accident, to a little inadvertency and failure of memory. South.

3. A lapse; a slight fault.

FAIN. adj. [faegn, Saxon.]
1. Glad; merry; cheerful; fond. It is still retained in Scotland in this sense.

And in her hand she held a mirror bright,
Wherein her face she often viewed fain. Fairy Queen.

My lips will be fain when I sing unto thee, and so will my soul whom thou hast delivered. Psalms lxxi.

2. Forced; obliged; compelled. [This signification seems to have arisen from the mistake of the original signification in some ambiguous expressions; as, I was fain to do this; would equally well with the rest of the sentence, whether it was understood to mean I was compelled, or I was glad to do it for fear of worse. Thus the primary meaning seems to have been early lost.]

Every weight to shroud it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fain. Spenser.

Whosoever will hear, he shall find God; whosoever will study to know, shall be also fain to believe. Hocker.

I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar. Shakspere's Measure for Measure.

When Hildebrand had accused Henry IV. there were none so hardy as to defend their lord; wherefore he was fain to humble himself before Hildebrand. Ralegh's Essays.

The learned Castilio was fain to make trenchers at Basse, to keep himself from starving. Locke.

FAIN. adv. [from the adjective.] Gladly;
very desirously; according to earnest wishes.

Now I would give a thousand farthings of sea for an acre of barren ground: I would fain die a dry death. Shakspere.

Why would'st thou urge me to confess a flame
I long have stifled, and would fain conceal. Addison's Cato.

FAN

F A I

from contusions. Wife's Surgery.

FAINTISHNESS. n. f. [from faint.] Weakness in a slight degree; incipient debility.

A certain degree of heat lengthens and relaxes the fibres; whence proceeds the sensation of faintness and debility in a hot day. Abbot on Air.

FAINTLING. adj. [from faint.] Timorous; feeble-minded. A burlesque or low word.

There's no having patience, thou art such a faintling silly creature. Abbot. Hist. of John Bull.

FAINTLY. adv. [from faint.]

1. Feebly; languidly.
Love's like a torch, which, if secur'd from blasts,
Will faintly burn; but then it longer lasts:
Expos'd to storms of jealousy and doubt,
The blaze grows greater, but 'tis sooner out. Walsh.

2. Not in bright colours.
Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light;
The lines, tho' touch'd but faintly, are drawn right. Pope.

3. Without force of representation.
I have told you what I have seen and heard but faintly; nothing like the image and horror of
it. Shaksp. King Lear.

2. The act of tumbling from an erect posture.
I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again, and caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how it was, he did so fet his teeth, and did tear it.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. The violence suffered in dropping from on high.

My son coming into his marriage-chamber, happened to have a fall, and died. 2 Esd. x. 48.
Spirit of wine, mingled with common water, if the first fall be broken, by means of a fop, or otherwise, stayeth above; and if once mingled; it severeth not again, as oil doth.

Bacon's Physical Remains.

A fever or fall may take away my reason. Locke.
Some were hurt by the falls they got by leaping upon the ground. Gulliver's Travels.

4. Death; overthrow; destruction incurred.
Wail his fall,
Whom I myself struck down. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a spoil, and had a great fall before our enemies.
Judith, viii. 9.

I will begin to pray for myself and for them;
for I see the falls of us that dwell in the land.
2 Ejdr. viii. 17.

5. Ruin; dissolution.
Paul's the late theme of such a muse, whose flight
Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height;
Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time, or
fire,
Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire.
Denham.

6. Downfall; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being deposed a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness, or from virtue to corruption. In a sense like this we say the fall of man, and the fall of angels.

Her memory served as an accuser of her change, and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall. Sidney.

Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and do'st enquire
Of my restraint; why here I live alone;
And piteest this my miserable fall.

Daniel's Civil War.

He, careless now of int'rest, fame, or fate,
Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great;
Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,
Behold thee glorious only in thy fall.

Pope to Parnell.

7. Declension of greatness, power, or dominion.
Till the empire came to be settled in Charles the Great, the fall of the Romans huge dominion concurring with other universal evils, caused those times to be days of much affliction and trouble throughout the world. Hooker.

8. Diminution; decrease of value.
That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London. Cibb.

9. Declination or diminution of sound; cadence;
close of music.
That strain again; it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet South
That breathes upon a bank of violets, Stealing and giving odours. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
How sweetly did they float upon the wings
Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night,
At ev'ry fall smoothing the raven down
Of darkness 'till it smil'd!
Milton.

10. Declivity; steep descent.

Waters when beat upon the shore, or strained, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks,
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals. Shakespeare.

A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, these things made them to swoon for fear. Wisdom.

Down through the crannies of the living walls
The chrysal streams descend in murmur'ing falls.
Dryden's Virgil.

The swain, in barren deserts, with surprise
Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;
And starts, amidst the thirsty wilds, to hear
New falls of water murmur'ing in his ear.
Pope's Messiah.

Now under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
He makes his moan;
And calls her ghost,
For ever, ever, ever lost! Pope's St. Cecilia.

12. The outlet of a current into any other water.

Before the fall of the Po into the gulph, it receives into its channel considerable rivers.
Addison on Italy.

13. Autumn; the fall of the leaf; the time when the leaves drop from the trees.
What crowds of patients the town doctor kills,
Or how last fall he rais'd the weekly bills.
Dryden's Juvenal.

14. Any thing that comes down in great quantities.

Upon a great fall of rain the current carried away a huge heap of apples. L'Estrange.

15. The act of felling or cutting down: as, the fall of timber.

FALLACIOUS. adj. [fallax, Latin; fallacious, French.]

1. Producing mistake; sophistical. It is never used of men, but of writings, propositions, or things.

The Jews believed and assented to things neither evident nor certain, nor yet so much as probable, but actually false and fallacious; such as the abur-dural doctrines and stories of their rabbies.
South's Sermons.

2. Deceitful; mocking expectation.
The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapour bland
About their spirits had play'd, and in inmost pow'rs

Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
False philosophy inspires Fallacious hope. Milton.

FALLACIOUSLY. adv. [from fallacious.] Sop-histically; with purpose to deceive; with unsound reasoning.

We shall so far encourage contradiction, as to promise not to oppose any pen that shall fallaciously refute us. Brown.

We have seen how fallaciously the author has stated the cause, by supposing that nothing but unlimited mercy, or unlimited punishment, are the methods that can be made use of. Addison.

FALLACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from fallacious.] Tendency to deceive; inconclusiveness.

FALLACY. n. f. [fallacia, Latin; fallace, Fr.]
Sophism; logical artifice; deceit; deceitful argument; delusory mode of ratiocination.

Most princes make themselves another thing from the people by a fallacy of argument, thinking themselves most kings when the subject is most basely subjected. Sidney.

Unt' I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the favour'd fallacy.

Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

It were a mere fallacy, and mistaking to ascribe that to the force of imagination upon another body, which is but the force of imagination upon the proper body. Bacon.

All men, who can see an inch before them, may easily detect gross fallacies. Dryden.

FALLIBILITY. n. f. [from fallible.] Liableness to be deceived; uncertainty; possibility of error.

There is a great deal of fallibility in the testimony of men; yet some things we may be almost as certain of, as that the sun shines, or that five twenties make an hundred. Watts.

FALLIBLE. adj. [falli, Lat.] Liable to error; such as may be deceived.

Do not falsify your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must die.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

He that creates to himself thousand of little hopes, uncertain in the promise, fallible in the event, and depending upon a thousand circumstances, often fails his expectations. Taylor.

Our intellectual or rational powers need some assistance, because they are so frail and fallible in the present state. Watts.

FALLING. } n. f. [from fall.] Indentings
FALLING in. } opposed to prominence.

It shows the nose and eyebrows, with the several prominencies and fallings in of the features, much more distinctly than any other kind of figure.
Addison on Medals.

FALLINGSICKNESS. n. f. [fall and sickness.]
The epilepsy; a disease in which the patient is without any warning deprived at once of his senses and falls down.

Did Caesar swoon?—He fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless.—He hath the falling sickness. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The dogfisher is good against the falling sickness.
Watts.

FALLOW. adj. [falepe, Saxon.]

1. Pale red, or pale yellow.
How does your fallow greyhound, sir?

I heard say he was out-run at Cotfale. Shakespeare.
The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, had a great desire to make a great park for red as well as fallow deer between Richmond and Hampton-court. Clarendon.

2. Unfowed; left to rest after the years of tillage. [Supposed to be so called from the colour of naked ground.]

The ridges of the fallow field lay traversed, 'so as the English must cross them in presenting the charge. Hayward.

3. Plowed, but not fowed; plowed as prepared for a second aration.

Her predecessors in their course of government, did but sometimes cast up the ground; and so leaving it fallow, it became quickly overgrown with weeds. Howell's Vocal Forest.

Her fallow leas

The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory, Doth root upon. Shakespeare's Henry V.

5. Unoccupied; neglected.
Shall fairs in civil bloodshed wallow

Of fairs, and let the cause lie fallow? Hudibras.

FALLOW. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Ground plowed in order to be plowed again.
The plowing of fallows is a benefit to land.
Mortimer.

The best ploughs to plow up Summer fallow with. Mortimer.

2. Ground lying at rest.
Within an ancient forest's ample verge,
There stands a lonely but a healthful dwelling,
Built for conveniency, and the use of life;
Around it fallows, meads, and pastures fair,
A little garden, and a limpid brook,
By nature's own contrivance seem'd dispos'd.

Rowe's Jane Shore.

To FALLOW. v. n. To plow in order to a second plowing.

Begin to plow up fallows: this first fallowing ought to be very shallow. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FALLOWNESS. n. f. [from fallow.] Barrenness;
an exemption from bearing fruit.

Like one, who in her third widowhood, doth profess

Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness,
She affects my muse now a chaste fallowness. Davies.

FAL

FALSE, adj. [falsus, Latin; falso, falso, Fr.]
1. Not morally true; expressing that which is not thought.

Innocence shall make False accusation blush, and tyranny Tremble at patience. Shakespeare's Wint. Tale.

There are false witnesses among men. L'Estrange.
2. Not physically true; conceiving that which does not exist.

For how can that be false which every tongue
Of every mortal man affirms for true?

Which truth hath in all ages been so strong,
As loadstone like, all heaps it ever drew. Davies.

A farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manner false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. Succeededaneous; supposititious.

Take a vessel, and make a false bottom of coarse canvas; fill it with earth above the canvas.

Bacon's Natural History.
4. Deceiving expectation; not solid; not found.

He fell, as a huge rocky cliff,
Whose false foundation waves have wash'd away,
With dreadful poise is from the main land left.

Fairy Queen.
When that flood in its own depths was drown'd,
It left behind it false and slippery ground. Dryden.

The heart of man looks fair, but when we come to lay any weight upon't, the ground is false under us.

L'Estrange.
5. Not agreeable to rule or propriety.

Now, by upon my false French; by mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate.

Shakespeare's Henry V.
6. Not honest; not just.

The true prince may, for recreation, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the times want countenance.

Shakespeare.
Men are sponges, which, to pour out, receive;
Who know false play, rather than lose, deceive.

Donne.
7. Treacherous; perfidious; traitorous; deceitful; hollow.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of every sin
That has a name.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.
False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand.

Shakespeare.
A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him.

Bacon's Henry VII.
So hast thou cheated Theseus with a wife,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free.

Dryden.
The ladies will make a numerous party against him for being false to love in forsaking Dido.

Dryden's Virgil.
8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real; as a false diamond.

False tears true pity moves: the king commands
To loose his fetters.

Dryden's Aeneid.
9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.

FALSE adv. Not truly; not honestly; not exactly; falsely.

What thou would'st highly,
And yet would'st wrongly win. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To FALSE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To violate by failure of veracity.

Is't not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou fals'd hast thy faith with perjury? Fairy Queen.

2. To deceive.

Fair seemly pleasure each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit;
And in his fals'd fancy he her takes

To be the fairest wight that lived yet. Fairy Queen.

3. To make feints; as fencers commonly do.

But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wife, and closely did await

Advantage, whilst his foe did rage most rife;

FAL

Sometimes athwart, sometimes he took him strait,
And fals'd oft his blows tillude him with such bait.

Fairy Queen.
4. This word is now out of use.

FALSEHEARTED, adj. [false and heart.] Treacherous; perfidious; deceitful; hollow.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and false-hearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, he noted.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
FALSEHOOD, n. f. [from false.]

1. Want of truth; want of veracity.

Artificer of fraud; he was the first
That practis'd falsehood under faintly show. Milton.

All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things.

South.
2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and colour serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud to warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heavenly form pretended
To hellish falsehood snare them.

Milton.
3. A lie; a false assertion.

In your answers there remains falsehood. Job.

4. Counterfeit; imposture.

For no falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness.

Milton.
FALSELY, adv. [from false.]

1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.

Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing protelytes and religion.

Government of the Tongue.
Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whose fleet more mighty every day became
By late success, which they did falsely boast;
And now by first appearing seem'd to claim.

Dryden's Ann. Mirabilis.
Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;

Falsely; for had he truly lov'd, at least
He would have giv'n one day to my request.

Dryden's Aeneas.
Such as are treated ill, and upbraided falsely, find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and will endeavour to soothe their secret resentments.

Addison's Spectator.
2. Erroneously; by mistake.

He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us.

Smalridge's Sermons.
3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.

FALSENESS, n. f. [from false.]

1. Contrariety to truth.

2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.

Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature?

Tillotson.
3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falseness or foulness of intentions, especially to perfonated devotion.

Hammond's Fundam.
4. Treachery; perfidy; traitoroufness.

King Richard might create a perfect guess,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would to that seed grow to a greater falseness.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.
The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falseness or cheated by the avarice of such a servant.

Rogers.
FAUSER, n. f. [from false.] A deceiver; an hypocrite. Now obsolete.

Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pardie, does all them remain,
That of such falsers friendship been fain.

Spenser's Pastoral.
FALSIFYABLE, adj. [from falsify.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.

FAL

FALSIFICATION, n. f. [falsification, French, from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify Divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous.

Hooker.
To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits Divine honour.

Bacon.
2. Confutation.

The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this idle, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification.

Broom.
FALSIFIER, n. f. [from falsify.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs.

Boyle.
2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.

Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others, that put their shames the worst together.

L'Estrange.
TO FALSIFY, v. a. [falsifier, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse that church, which through corrupt translations of Scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, propotheth that to the people of God as Scripture, which is in truth no Scripture.

Hooker.
The Irish bards use to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man.

Spenser on Ireland.
Falsifying the balance by deceit.

Amos.
2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish æconomy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction.

Addison.
3. To violate; to break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled.

Sidney.
He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate.

Knolles's History.
This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trusts.

Decay of Piety.
4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rash'd away, his ample shield
Is falsify'd, and round with jav'lines fill'd,

Dryden's Aeneid.
Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si græco fonte cadunt, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, make my meaning plain:

Ma si l'Usbergo d'Ambi era per fesso,
Che mai poter falsarlo in nessun canto.

Ariosto, cant. xxvi.
Falsa

Falsar cannot otherwise be turned than by falsified: for his shield was falsed, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored and stuck with javelins. Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalise the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

To FALSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South.

FALSITY. n. f. [falsitas, Latin.]

1. Falshood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker.

Can you on him such falsities obtrude? Sandys.

And as a mortal the most wife delude? Sandys. Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding. South.

2. A lie; an error; a false assertion or position.

That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the North, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities. Glanville's Sceptis.

To FALTER. v. n. [falter, to be wanting, Spanish: vaultar, a flammer, Islandick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein, Tell on, quoth she. Fairy Queen.

The pale assistants on each other star'd, With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;

The still-born sounds upon the palate hung, And dy'd imperfect on the faltering tongue. Dryd.

He changes, gods! and falters at the question: His fears, his words, his looks declare him guilty. Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king Shall falter under foul rebellious arms.

He found his legs falter. Shakespeare's Richard II. Wifom. Surg.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far idiots are concerned in the want or weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover. Locke.

To FALTER. v. a. To sift; to cleanse. This word seems to be merely rustick or provincial.

Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, seeds and oats.

FALTERINGLY. adv. [falter, from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

To FAMBLE. v. a. [famler, Danish.] To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Skinner.

FAME. n. f. [fama, Latin; ῥῆμα, Dorick.]

1. Celebrity; renown.

The house to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries. Chronicles.

The desire of fame will not suffer endowments to lie uselefs. Addison's Spectator.

What is this fame, for which we thoughts employ,

The owner's wife, which other men enjoy? Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt. Jes. ix. 9.

I shall shew what are true fames. Bacon.

FAMED. adj. [fama, Latin.] Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.

He is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

He purposes to seek the Clarian god, Avoiding Delphos, his more fam'd abode, Since Phlegian robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.

Aristides was an Athenian philosopher, famed for his learning and wisdom; but converted to Christianity. Addison.

FAMELESS. adj. [fama, Latin.] Having no fame; without renown. Not in use.

Then let me, fameless, love the fields and woods, The fruitful water'd vales and running floods. May's Virgil.

FAMILIAR. adj. [familiaris, Latin.]

1. Domestick; relating to a family.

They range familiar to the dome. Pope.

2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.

Kalandar streight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.

I see not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar to all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened. Hooker.

Let us chuse such noble counsel, That war, or peace, or both at once, may be As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Our sweet Recess and only consolation left

Familiar to our eyes! Milton's Paradise Lost.

One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance. Watts on the Mind.

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.

Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd

In temper and in nature, will receive Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton.

The senses at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them. Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I, could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and desolation. Gulliver's Travels.

Patient permit the sadly pleasing strain Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain. Pope's Odyssey.

6. Common; frequent.

To a wrong hypothesis may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this. Locke.

7. Easy; unconstrained.

He unreins His muse, and sports in loose familiar strains. Addison.

8. Too nearly acquainted.

A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad, and could not prove it, the priest sued him for defamation. Camden.

FAMILIAR. n. f.

1. An intimate; one long acquainted.

The king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar. Shakespeare.

When he finds himself avoided and neglected by his familiar, this affects him. Rogers.

1. Easiness of conversation; omission of ceremony; affability.

2. Acquaintance; habitude.

We contract at last such an intimacy and familiarity with them, as makes it difficult and irksome for us to call off our minds. Asterbury.

3. Easy intercourse.

They say any mortals may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle spirits. Pope.

To FAMILIARIZE. v. a. [familiariser, French.]

1. To make familiar; to make easy by habitude; to make common.

2. To bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions. Addison's Spectator.

FAMILIARLY. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.

Because that I familiarly sometimes Do use you for my fool, and chat with you, Your lawfulness will jest upon my love. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tiltyard, and then he broke his head. Shakespeare.

The governor came to us, and, after salutations, said familiarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and fat him down.

2. Commonly; frequently; with the unconcernedness or easiness of long custom.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon. Raleigh's History.

Deluded mortals, whom the great Chuse for companions tête-à-tête;

Who at their dinners, en famille, Get leave to sit whene'er you will. Swift.

FAMILY. n. f. [familia, Latin; famille, French.]

1. Those who live in the same house; household.

The night made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat. Swift.

2. Those that descend from one common progenitor; a race; a tribe; a generation.

Of Gerihon was the family of the Libnites. Numbers.

3. A course of descent; a genealogy.

If thy ancient but ignoble blood Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood;

Go and complain thy family is young, Nor own thy fathers have been fools so long. Pope.

4. A class; a tribe; a species.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watery. Bacon's Natural History.

FAMINE. n. f. [famine French; fimes, Latin.]

Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our castle's strength Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie;

Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Famines have not been of late observed to be rare, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea, but principally by the goodness of God. Stiles.

FAN

This city never felt a siege before,
But from the lake receiv'd its daily store;
Which now shut up, and millions crowded here,
Famine will soon in multitudes appear.

Dryden's Indian Emp.
To FA'MISH. v. a. [from fames, Latin; famis, old French.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.

What, did he marry me to famish me? Shaksp.
The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel,
And Sisyphus, that labours up the hill
The rowling rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel.

2. To kill by deprivation or denial of any thing necessary to life. Milton uses it with of.

Thin air
Above the clouds will pine his entrails grofs,
And famish him of breath if not of bread. Milton.

To FA'MISH. v. n. To die of hunger; to suffer extreme hunger.

You are resolv'd rather to die than to famish.
Shaksp.

FA'MISHMENT. n. f. [from famish.] The pain of hunger; want of food.

Apicius, thou did'st it on thy gut bestow
Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd portion drank't. Hick. will on Provind.

FAMOUS. n. f. [from famous.] Renown; celebrity.

FA'MOUS. adj. [fameux, French; famosus, Lat.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long;
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.

Shaksp. Henry VI.

There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown.

She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her.

Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and swine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was surnamed Rupographus.

Peacham on Drawing.

I shall be nam'd among the famous of women, sung at solemn festivals.

Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloign, turned into English by Fairfax.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification, and imports fame whether for good or ill.

Menebrates and Menas, famous pyrates,
Make the sea serve them. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

FA'MOUSLY. adv. [from famous.] With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched
With politick grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace.

Shaksp. Richard III.

They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read.

FA'MOUSNESS. n. f. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

FAN. n. f. [fanus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scarfs, and fans, and double change of
With amber bracelets, beads, and all such knavery.

Shaksp.

Flavia, the least and flightest toy
Can with resistless art employ:
In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of small force in love;
But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or safely seen,
Directs its wanton motions so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;
Gives coolness to the matchless dame,
To every other breast a flame.

Asterbury.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before.

Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to shew him such a fan of feathers.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed. [Fan, French.]

Flaile, strawfolk, and rake, with a fan that is strong.

Atles shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away.

Shaksp. For the cleansing of corn is commonly used either a wicker-fan, or a fan with sails.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The prisoner, with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighbouring maple wing'd his flight.

Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counsels: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love.

To FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves.

Spektor.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair.

The Norwegian banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold.

Shaksp. The air

Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:

From branch to branch the smaller birds with song

Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,

'Till ev'n.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;
To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose:

The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,
And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any.

Not so the wicked; but as chaff, which, fann'd,
The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand

In judgment.

FANATICISM. n. f. [from fanatic.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the Scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all the arguments of his enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their flanders and calumnies.

FANATICK. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, French.] Enthusiastic; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and forceries abus'd Fanatick Egypt, and her priests to seek Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms.

Milton.

FANATICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine, than the tumultuary weapon snatched up by a fanatic.

Decay of Pity.

FAN

FA'NCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason: of persons.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented.

Woodward's Natural History.

2. Directed by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images: of things.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings? and how foolish and fanciful were they?

It would show as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it.

Garib's Preface to Ovid.

FA'NCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

FA'NCIFULNESS. n. f. [from fanciful.] Addition to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FA'NCY. n. f. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; φαντασία.]

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakespeare, fancy's sweetest child!

Warble his native wood-notes wild.

In the soul

Are many lesser faculties, that serve Reason as chief: among these fancy next

Her office holds; of all external things, Which the five watchful senses represent,

She forms imaginations, airy shapes, Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames

All what we affirm, or what deny, and call Our knowledge, or opinion.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence which gives us full satisfaction, and as clear a conviction to our reason.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:

Whom we now a goddess call,
Divinely grac'd in every feature,
Strait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature;

Love and hate are fancy all.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Mens private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my Lord, why do you keep alone;
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died.

With them they think on? Shaksp. Macbeth.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling.

To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of single life.

A resemblance in humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection.

6. In Shakespeare it signifies love.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?

It is engender'd in the eyes,
In the cradle where it lies.

Shaksp. Merch. of Ven.

7. Ca-

FAN

7. Caprice; humour; whim.
True worth shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led.

Dryden's Ind. Emp.
The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took upon a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury.

8. False notion.
The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatic, and medicinal substances are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things, have passed their period, and nourish not.

Bacon's Natural History.
9. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value.

London-pride is a pretty fancy for borders.

To FA'NCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so; all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies.

Spaul's Sermons.
If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the infide and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with.

Locke.
To FA'NCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.
But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;
Who mighty thought can clothe with manly drefs,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er express.

Dryden's Juvenal.
2. To like; to be pleased with.
Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband.

Raleigh's History.
It is a little hard that the queen cannot demonstrate this town in whatever manner she pleaseth to fancy.

FA'NCY-MONGER. n. f. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancy-monger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him.

Shakespeare's As You Like It.
FA'NCYSICK. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unfound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come to be fancy-sick, there's no cure.

L'Estrange.
FAND for found. It is retained in Scotland.

This when as true by tryal he out fund,

He bade to open wide his brazen gate.

Spenser.
FANE. n. f. [fane, French; fanum, Latin.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion. A poetical word.

Nor fane, nor capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege!

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Old Calide, who kept the sacred fane

Of Juno, now she seem'd.

Dryden's Æn.
Yet come to fanes repair'd, and humble rites

Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods,

Who with their vot'ries in one ruin shar'd.

Philips.
A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,

Mewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb.

Tickell.

The fields are ravish'd from th' industrious fawns,

From men their cities, and from gods their fanes.

Pope.

FA'NFARON. n. f. [French, from the Spanish.
Originally in Arabick it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Menage.]

1. A bully; a hector.

Virgil makes Æneas a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a farfaron or hector. Dryd. on Dr. Poole.

2. A blusterer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in feats of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it.

L'Estrange.

FANFARONADE. n. f. [from fanfaron, French.]

A bluster; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fan-faronade of Monsieur Bouffleurs.

Swift.

To FANG. v. a. [fangen, Saxon; wangen,

Dutch.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch. To wang is yet used in Devonshire.

Shakespeare's Timon.

Destruction fang mankind.

FANG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal by which the prey is seized and held; any thing like 'em.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,

The season's difference; as the icy fang

And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind;

Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,

Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say

This is no flattery.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs or tusks; as boars, pikes, falcons, and dogs, though less.

Bacon's Natural History.

Prepar'd to fly,

The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,

And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain

The bulk; the bulk, unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain.

Dryden's Ovid.

Then charge, provoke the lion to the rage

Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,

Rivet the panting savage to the ground.

Add. Cato.

2. The nails; the talons.

3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

FA'NGED, adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,

Whom I will trust as I will address fang'd,

They bear the mandate.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush

With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:

In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,

Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,

And strew a dreadful harvest on the plain.

Philips's Briton.

FA'NGLE. n. f. [from fengan, Saxon, to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme.

It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new; as, new fangle, new fanglemis.

FA'NGLED, adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gawdy; ridiculously shewy;

vainly decorated: new fangled, is therefore new fashioned; dressed out in new decorations.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose unconstant.

Ascham.

A book! oh, rare one!

Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment

Nobler than that it covers.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FA'NGLESS, adj. [from fang.] Toothless; without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rods

On late offenders, that he now doth lack.

The very instruments of chastisement;

So that his pow'r, like to a fangless lion,

May offer, but not hold.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FA'NGOT. n. f. A quantity of wares: as raw silk, &c. containing from one to two hundred weight three quarters.

Diſt.

FA'NNEL. n. f. [fanel, French.] A sort of ornament like a scarf, worn about the left arm of a mass-priest when he officiates.

Diſt.

I will send unto Babylon fanners that shall fan her.

Jeremiah.

FA'NTASIED. adj. [from fantasy.] Filled with fancies or wild imaginations.

As I travelled hither through the land,

I found the people strangely fantasied.

Shakespeare's King John.

FANTA'SM. n. f. [See PHANTASM.] A thing

not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FANTA'STICAL. adj. [fantastique, French;

FANTA'STICK. } from fantasy.]

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.

The delight that a man takes from another's sin,

can be nothing else but a fantastical, preternatural complacency arising from that which he really has no feeling of.

South.

2. Subsisting only in the fancy; imaginary.

Present feats

Are less than horrible imaginings:

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,

Shakes to my single state of man, that function

Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,

But what is not.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies,

that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination.

Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionaly.

Are ye fantastical, or that indeed

Which outwardly ye shew? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. Uncertain; unsteady; irregular.

Nor happiness can I, nor misery feel,

From any turn of her fantastick wheel.

Prior.

5. Whimsical; fanciful; capricious; humorous; indulgent of one's own imagination.

They put such words in the mouths of one of these fantastical mind-infected people, that children and musicians call lovers.

Sidney.

I'll knit it up in silken strings,

With twenty odd conceited true love knots:

To be fant'lick, may become a youth

Of greater time than I.

Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Duomvir is provided with an imperious, expensive and fantastick mistress; to whom he retires from the conversation of a discreet and affectionate wife.

Tatler.

We are apt to think your medallists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon their coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed.

Addison.

FANTA'STICALITY. adv. [from fantastical.]

1. By the power of imagination.

2. Capriciously; humourously; unsteadily.

England is so idly king'd,

Her sceptre so fantastically borne,

By a vain, giddy, shallow, humourous youth,

That fear attends her not.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

3. Whimsically; in compliance with mere imagination.

One cannot so much as fantastically chuse, even or odd, he thinks not why.

Grew's Cosmol.

FANTA'STICALNESS. n. f. [from fantastical.]

FANTA'STICKNESS. } n. f. [from fantastical.]

1. Humourousness; mere compliance with fancy.

2. Whimsicalness; unreasonableness.

I dare not assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it.

Tillotson, Preface.

3. Caprice; unsteadiness.

FA'NTASY. n. f. [fantasy, Fr. phantasia, Lat.

phantasia.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagina-

ing. See FANCY.

Heist.

How now, Horatio? you tremble and look pale!
Is not this something more than fantasy?

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more unconstant than the wind.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere the sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy,
Sleep she as found as careless infancy. Shakespeare.
These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the form of objects, ill or well;
And so they fend a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell.

Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there.

Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.
And with the fug'ry sweet thereof allure, Chaste ladies ears to fantasies impure. Hubb. Tale.
3. Humour; inclination.

cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasies and affections. Whitgift.

FA'NTOM. n. f. [See PHANTOM.] Something
not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FAP. adj. Fuddled; drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakespeare.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses; and being fap, fir, was, as they say, cashiered. Shakespeare.

FAR. adv. [peop, Saxon; fatt, Erse.]

1. To great extent in length.

Pay sacred rev'rence to Apollo's song,
Left wrathful the far-shooting god emit
His fatal arrows. Pope.

2. To a great extent every way. This is less proper.

Vast and great
Is what I love: the far-extended ocean
To a little riv'let I prefer. Prior.

With costly cates Rome stain'd her frugal board;
Then with ill-gotten gold she bought a lord:
Corruption, discord, luxury combin'd,
Down sunk the far-fam'd mistress of mankind.

Arbutnot.

From the same lineage stern Æetes came,
The far-fam'd brother of th' enchantress dame.

Pope.

3. To a great distance progressively.
Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far

As who goes farthest. Shakespeare's Jul. Caesar.

a guide, because the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with his army. Knolles.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects nigh and far,
Look not into this little world of mine. Davies.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves Seek them with wand'ring thoughts, and notions vain. Milton.

I have been hunting up and down, far and near,
since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy. L'Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And fend the flow'r of war by public voice. Dryd.

The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away. Dryden's Virg.

But from the reading of my book and me,
Be far, ye foes of virtuous poetry!

Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe.

Dryden's Preface.

Far off you view'd them with a longing eye
Upon the topmost branch. Dryden.

These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find the quite contrary. Locke.

'Till on the Po his blasted corps was hurl'd,
Far from his country, in the western world.

Addison's Ovid.

In ancient times, doth differ far

From what our fiery battles are. Waller.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved. Tillotson.

Latin is a more fuccinct language than the Italian, Spanish, French, or even the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them. Dryden.

The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryden.

Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,
With you immortal, and with beauty blest. Pope.

Ah! hope not yet to breathe thy native air;
Far other journey first demands thy care. Pope's Od.

8. To a great height; magnificently. This is perhaps only in Shakespeare.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.

—You speak him far. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

9. To a certain point; to a certain degree.
The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself. Hooker.

How far forth you do like their articles.

Not to resolve, is to resolve; and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far in some other sort, as to resolve. Bacon.

Of this I need not many words to declare how far it is from being so much as any part of repentance. Hammond.

My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it. Tillotson.

The custom of these tongues sometimes so far influences the expressions, that in these epistles one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

10. Far off. At a great distance.
For though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Milton.

11. Far off. To a great distance.
Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life. Milton.

12. Off is join'd with far, when far, noting distance, is not followed by a preposition: as, I set the boat far off, I set the boat far from me.

13. Far is used often in composition; as, far- shooting, farseeing.

FAR-FETCH. n. f. [far and fetch.] A deep stratagem. A ludicrous word.

But Jesuits have deeper reaches;
In all the politick farfetches;
And from their Coptick priest, Kircherus, Found out this mytick way to jeer us. Hudibras.

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [far and fetch.]
1. Brought from places remote.
Of these things others quickly will dispose,
Whose pains have earn'd the farfetch'd spoil. Milton.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the farfetch'd gold into the mine,
And that which brib'd our fathers made our prize. Dryden.

2. Studiously fought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.
York, with all his farfetch'd policy.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.
For farfetch'd rhymes make puzzled angels strain,
And in low prose dull Lucifer complain. Smith.

Under this head we may rank those words, which signify those ideas, by a sort of an unac-countable farfetch'd analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted. Watts's Logick.

FAR-PIERCING. adj. [far and pierce.] Striking, or penetrating a great way.
Atlas, her fire, to whose farpiercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded lie;
Th' eternal columns which on earth he rears,
End in the starry vault, and prop the spheres. Pope's Odyssey.

FAR-SHOOTING. adj. [far and shoot.] Shooting to a great distance.
Then loud he call'd Æneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Æneas came;
Great Jove, he said, and the farshooting god,
Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good. Dryden's Æneid.

FAR. adj.
1. Distant; remote.
A man taking a far journey. Mark.
But we must beg our bread in climes unknown,
Beneath the scorching or the freezing zone;
And come to far Oaxis shall be sold,
To try the Libyan heat, or Scythian cold. Dryden's Virgil.

2. It was formerly used not only as an adverb but an adjective, with off.
These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shakespeare.
If we may behold in any creature any one spark of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightness, the fame in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived.
Raleigh's History of the World.

3. From FAR. In this sense it is used elliptically for a far, or remote place.
The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth. Deut. xxvii. 49.

4. Re-

4. Remoter of the two; in horfemanfhip; the right fide of the horfe, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.

No true Egyptian ever knew in horfes
The far fide from the near. Dryden's Cleomenes.
5. It is often not eafy to diftinguifh whether it be adjective or adverb: as,
The nations far and near center'd in choice. Dryden.

FAR. n. f. [contracted from farrow.] The offspring of a fow; young pigs.
Sows, ready to farrow at this time of the year,
Are for to be made of and counted full dear;
For now is the lofs of the far of the fow
More great than the lofs of two calves of the cow. Taffer.

TO FARCE. v. a. [farcis, Latin; farcir, Fr.]
1. To ftuff; to fill with mingled ingredients.
Wrestling is a paftime which either the Cornifhmen derived from Corineus, their firft pretended founder, or at leaft it miniftred fome ftuff to the farcing of that fable. Carew.

The firft principles of Chriftian Religion fhould not be farced with fchool points and private tenets.
Bp. Sanderson.

2. To extend; to fwel out.

'Tis not the balm, the fceptre and the ball,
The fword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The entertaing robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running fore the king.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

FARCE. n. f. [from the verb; or from farcir, French, to mock.] A dramatick representation written without regularity, and ftuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.

There is yet a lower fort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which a grotesque is in a picture: the perfons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners falfe; that is, inconfiftent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the juft resemblance of this. Dryden's Dufrenoy.

What fhould be great, you turn to farce.

Prior.

They object againft it as a farce, becaufe the irregularity of the plot fhould anfwer to the extravagance of the characters, which they fay this piece wants, and therefore is no farce. Gay.

FARICAL. adj. [from farce.] Belonging to a farce; appropriated to a farce.

They deny the characters to be farical, becaufe they are actually in nature.

Gay's Preface to the What d'ye Call it

FARCY. n. f. [farcina, Italian; farcin, French.]
The leprosy of horfes. It is probably curable by antimony.

FARDEL. n. f. [fardello, Ital. fardeau, Fr.] a bundle; a little pack.

Let us to the king: there is that in this fardel will make him scratch his beard.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Who would fardels bear,

To groan and fweat under a weary life?

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

TO FARE. v. n. [farjan, Saxon; waren, Dut.]

1. To go; to pafs; to travel.

At laft, refolving forward ftill to fare,

Until the bluft'ring ftorm is overblown. F. Queen.

His fpirits pure were fubject to our fight,

Like to a man in fheiw and fhape he fared.

Fairfax.

So on he fares, and to the border comes

Of Eden. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Sadly they far'd along the fea-beat fhore;

Still heav'd their hearts. Pope.

2. To be in any ftate good or bad.

So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend.

Fairy Queen.

A ftubborn heart fhall fare evil at the laft.

Ecclaf.

Well fare the hand, which to our humble fight

Prefents that beauty. Waller.

So in this throng bright Sachariffa far'd,

Opprefs'd by thofe who ftrove to be her guard:

As fhips, though never fo obfequious, fall

Foul in a tempeft on their admiral. Waller.

So fares the flag among th' enraged hounds;
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds.
Denham.

But as a barque, that, in foul weather,
Tofs'd by two adverfe winds together,
Is bruis'd and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t' oppofe.

Hudibras.

If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare.

L'Estrange.

Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows
Amidft the crowd. Dryden's Æneid.

Englifh minifters never fare fo well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and animofities of the nation.

Addifon's Freeholder.

Some are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they fhall fare no worfe than their neighbours. Swift.

3. To proceed in any train of confequences good or bad.

Thus it fareth when too much defire of contradiction caufeth our fpeeches rather to pafs by number than to ftay for weight. Hooker.

So fares it when with truth falfehood contends.

Milton.

4. To happen to any one well or ill: with it preceding in an imperfonal form.

When the hand finds itfelf well warmed and covered, let it refufe the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head, 'till the body be ftarved or killed, and then we fhall fee how it will fare with the hand. South.

5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.

Luke.

The rich man fared fumptuoufly every day.

Feaft your ears with the mufick awhile, if they will fare fo harfhly as on the trumpet's found.

Shakespeare's Timon.

Men think they have fared hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have defcended fo low as to eat dogs; but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Price of paffage in a vehicle by land or by water. Ufed only of that which is paid for the perfon, not the goods.

He found a fhip going to Tarfhifh; fo he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarfhifh. Jonas.

He paffage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants two farthings to difcharge his fare.

Dryden's Juvenal.

2. Food prepared for the table; provifions.

But come, fo well refresh'd, now let us play,
As meet is, after fuch delicious fare. Milton.

But when the weftern winds with vital pow'r
Call forth the tender grafs and budding flow'r,

Then, at the laft, produce in open air
Both flocks, and fend them to their fummer's fare.

Dryden.

This is what nature's want may well fuffice;

He that would more is covetous, not wife:
But fince among mankind fo few there are,

Who will conform to philofophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy eafe,

And mingle fomething of our times to pleafe.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Upon his rifing up he ordered the peafant to fet before him whatever food he had in his houfe:
the peafant brought out a great deal of coarfe fare,
of which the emperor eat very heartily.

Addifon's Guardian.

FAREWELL. adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb fare well, or fare you well; fit felix, ab in bonum veni; or bene fit tibi; but in time ufe familiarifed it to an adverb, and it is ufed both by thofe who go and thofe who are left.]

1. The parting compliment; adieu.

But farewelly, king; fith thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banifhment is here.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Whether we fhall meet again, I know not,
Therefore our everlafting farewell take;
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Caffius.

Shakespeare's Julius Cæfar.

Be not amazed, call all your fenfes to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakespeare.

An iron flumber fhuts my fwimming eyes;
And now farewell, involv'd in fhades of night,
For ever I am ravifh'd from thy fight.

Dryden's Virg. Gæ.

Farewell, fays he; the parting found fcarce fell
From his faint lips, but he replied farewell. Dry.

O queen, farewell! be ftill poifelt
Of dear remembrance, bleffing ftill and bleft!

Pope's Odyffey.

2. It is fometimes ufed only as an expreffion of feparation without kindnefs.

Farewell the year, which threaten'd fo
The faireft light the world can fhew. Waller.

Treading the path to nobler ends,
A long farewell to love I gave;

Refolv'd my country and my friends
All that remain'd of me fhould have. Waller.

3. Its original verbal meaning is preferved when it is ufed plurally.

Farewell, matter Silence: I will not ufe many words with you; fare you well, gentlemen, both.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FAREWELL. n. f.

1. Leave; act of departure.

See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious fun.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

If chance the radiant fun, with farewell fweet,
Extend his ev'ning beam, the fields revive,

The birds their notes renew, and bleeting herds
Atteft their joy, that hill and valley ring. Milton.

As in this grove I took my laft farewell,
As on this very fpot of earth I fell.

Dryden.

Before I take my farewell of this fubject, I fhall advife the author for the future to fpeak his meaning more plainly. Addifon.

2. It is fometimes ufed as an adjective; leave-taking.

Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the publick in farewell papers, will not give over fo, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Speftator.

fion, Saxon.]

1. Ground let to a tenant; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.

Touching their particular complaint for reducing lands and farms to their ancient rents, it could not be done without a parliament. Hayward.

2. The ftate of lands let out to the culture of tenants.

The lords of land in Ireland do not ufe to fet out their land in farm, for term of years, to their tenants; but only from year to year, and fome during pleafure. Spenser on Ireland.

It is great wilfulnefs in landlords to make any longer farms unto their tenants. Spenser.

TO FARM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To let out to tenants at a certain rent.

We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm,
The revenue whereof fhall furnifh us
For our affairs in hand. Shaksp. Richard II.

Sows ready to farrow this time of the year. Tusser.

The swine, although multiparous, yet being bifolious, and only cloven-hoofed, is farrowed with open eyes, as other bifolious animals. Brown.
Ev'n her, who did her numerous offspring boast,
As fair and fruitful as the sow that carry'd
The thirty pigs at one large litter farrow'd. Dryden's Juvenal.

FART. n. f. [fent, Saxon.] Wind from behind.

Love is the fart
Of every heart;
It pains a man when 'tis kept close;
And others doth offend, when 'tis let loose. Suckling.

TO FART. v. a. [from the noun.] To break wind behind.

As when we a gun discharge,
Although the bore be ne'er so large,
Before the flame from muzzle burst,
Just at the breech it flashes first;
So from my lord his passion broke,
He farted first, and then he spoke. Swift.

FARTHER. adv. [This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analogy can far make farther or farthest: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write farther and farthest, from forth, forther, forthest, ponther, purther, Saxon; the o and u, by resemblance of sound, being first confounded in speech, and afterwards in books.] At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely; beyond; moreover.

To make a perfect judgment of good pictures, when compared with one another, besides rules, there is farther required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

They contented themselves with the opinions, fashions, and things of their country, without looking any farther. Locke.

FARTHER. adj. [supposed from far, more probably from forth, and to be written farther.]

1. More remote.
Let me add a farther truth, that without ties of gratitude, I have a particular inclination to honour you. Dryden.

2. Longer; tending to greater distance.
Before our farther way the fates allow,
Here must we fix on high the golden bough. Dryden's Æneid.

FARTHERANCE. n. f. [more properly fartherance, from farther.] Encouragement; promotion.

That was the foundation of the learning I have, and of all the fartherance that I have obtained. Ajban's Schoolmaster.

FARTHERMORE. adv. [more properly farthermore.] Besides; over and above; likewise.

Farthermore the leaves, body and boughs of this tree, by so much exceed all other plants, as the greatest men of power and worldly ability surpass the meanest. Raleigh's History.

TO FARTHER. v. a. [more proper to farther.] To promote; to facilitate; to advance.

He had farthered or hindered the taking of the town. Dryden.

FARTHEST. adv. [more properly farthest.] See FARTHER.

1. At the greatest distance.

2. To the greatest distance.

FARTHEST. adj. Most distant; remotest.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection. Hooker.

FARTHING. n. f. [peopling, Saxon, from peopen, four, that is, the fourth part of a penny.]

1. The fourth of a penny; the smallest English coin.

A farthing is the least denomination or fraction of money used in England. Cocker's Arithmetick.

Else all those things we toil so hard in,
Would not avail one single farthing. Prior.

You are not obliged to take money not of gold or silver; not the halfpence or farthings of England. Swift.

2. Copper money.

The parish find, 'tis true; but our churchwardens

Feed on the silver, and give us the farthings. Gay.

3. It is used sometimes in a sense hyperbolic: as, it is not worth a farthing; or proverbial.

His son builds on, and never is content,
'Till the last farthing is in structure spent. Dryden's Juvenal.

4. A kind of division of land. Not in use.

Thirty acres make a farthing-land; nine farthings a Cornish acre; and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. Carew.

FARTHINGALE. n. f. [This word has much exercised the etymology of Skinner, who at last seems to determine that it is derived from vertu garde: if he had considered what vert signifies in Dutch, he might have found out the true sense.]

A hoop; circles of whalebone used to spread the petticoat to a wide circumference.

With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things. Shakespeare.

Tell me,
What compass will you wear your farthingale? Shakespeare.

Arthur wore in hall
Round table like a farthingale. Hudibras.

Some will have it that it portends the downfall of the French king; and observe, that the farthingale appeared in England a little before the ruin of the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

She seems a medley of all ages,
With a huge farthingale to swell her fustian stuff,

A new commode, a topknot, and a ruff. Swift.

FASCES. n. f. [Latin.] Rods anciently carried before the consuls as a mark of their authority.

The duke beheld, like Scipio, with disdain,
That Carthage, which he ruin'd, rise once more;
And shook aloft the fascies of the main,
To fright those slaves with what they felt before. Dryden.

FASCIATA. n. f. [Latin.] A fillet; a bandage.

FASCIATED. adj. [from fascia.] Bound with fillets; tied with a bandage. DiSc.

FASCINATION. n. f. [from fascia.] Bandage; the act or manner of binding diseased parts.

Three especial sorts of fascination, or rowling, have the worthies of our profession commended to posterity. Wifemen.

TO FASCINATE. v. a. [fascino, Latin.] To bewitch; to enchant; to influence in some wicked and secret manner.

There be none of the affections which have been noted to fascinate or bewitch, but love and envy. Bacon.

Such a fascinating sin this is, as allows men no liberty of consideration. Decay of Piety.

FASCINATION. n. f. [from fascinate.] The power or act of bewitching; enchantment; unseen inexplicable influence.

He had such a crafty and bewitching fashion, both to move pity and to induce belief, as was like a kind of fascination and enchantment to those that saw him or heard him. Bacon.

The Turks hang old rags, or such like ugly things, upon their fairest horses, and other goodly creatures, to secure them against fascination. Waller.

There is a certain bewitchery or fascination in words, which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of. Scutb.

FASCINE. n. f. [French.] A faggot. Military cant.

The Black Prince passed many a river without the help of pontoons, and filled a ditch with faggots as successfully as the generals of our times do with fascines. Addison's Spectator.

FASCINOUS. adj. [fascinum, Latin.] Caused or acting by witchcraft, or enchantment. Not in use.

I shall not discuss the possibility of fascinous diseases, farther than refer to experiment. Harvey on Consumptions.

FASHION. n. f. [fagon, French; facies, Lat.]

1. Form; make; state of any thing with regard to its outward appearance.

They pretend themselves grieved at our solemnities in erecting churches, at their form and fashion, at the stateliness of them and costliness, and at the opinion which we have of them. Hooker.

The fashion of his countenance was altered. Luke.

Stand these poor people's friend.

—I will,
Or let me lose the fashion of a man. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

2. The make or cut of cloaths.

I'll be at charges for a looking-glass,
And entertain a score or two of taylors,
To study fashions to adorn my body. Shakespeare's Richard III.

You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. Manner; sort; way.

For that I love your daughter
In such a righteous fashion as I do, Perforce against all checks, rebukes, and manners,

I must advance. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

Pluck Casca by the sleeve,
And he will, after his four fashion, tell you What hath proceeded. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.

The

The commissioners either pulled down or defaced all images in churches; and that in such unfeasonable and unfeasoned fashion, as if it had been done in hostility against them. Hayward.

To FA'SHION. v. a. [fasonner, French, from the noun.]

1. To form; to mould; to figure.

He loves me well, and I have giv'n him reasons;
Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

Did not he that made me in the womb, make him? And did not one fashion us in the womb? Job.

The graves of the rebellious generations were already fashioned in the clouds, which soon after should swallow up all living creatures. Raleigh's History.

The rib he form'd, and fashion'd with his hand:
Under his forming hands a creature grew,
Man like, but different sex. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Inability will every one find in himself, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received by his senses from external objects, or by reflection from the operations of his mind about them. Locke.

How could this noble fabrick be design'd,
And fashion'd, by a maker brute and blind?
Could it of art such miracles invent?
And raise a beauteous world of such extent? Blackmore.

A different toil another forge employs,
Here the loud hammer fashions female toys;
Each trinket that adorns the modern dame,
First to these little artists ow'd its frame. Gay's Fan.

2. To fit; to adapt; to accommodate.

Laws ought to be fashioned unto the manners and conditions of the people to whom they are meant, and not to be imposed upon them according to the simple rule of right. Spenser.

Ne do, I doubt, but that ye well can fashion
Yourselfes thereto, according to occasion. Hubb. Tale.

Nature, as it grows again tow'rd's earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy. Shakespeare's Timon.

Though from an humble stock undoubtedly,
Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

3. To counterfeit. Not used.

It better fits my blood to be disdain'd of all,
Than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any. Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

4. To make according to the rule prescribed by custom.

The value of the labour employed about one parcel of silver more than another, makes a difference in their price; and thus fashioned plate sells for more than its weight. Locke.

FA'SHIONABLE. adj. [from fashion.]

1. Approved by custom; established by custom; modish.

The eminence of your condition will invite gentlemen to the study of nature, and make philosophy fashionable. Glanville.

We have some meats, and breads, and drinks, which taken by men enable them to fast long after. Bacon's New Atlantis.

2. To mortify the body by religious abstinence.

When thou fastest, anoint thy head and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast. Mat. vi.

Last night the very god shew'd me a vision:
I fast, and pray'd for their intelligence. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FAST. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Abstinence from food.

A thousand men have broke their fasts to-day,
That ne'er shall dine, unless thou yield the crown. Shakespeare.

Where will this end? Four times ten days I've pass'd,

Wand'ring this woody maze, and human food
Nor tasted, nor had appetite; that fast
To virtue I impute not, or count part Of what I suffer here. Milton.

Happy and innocent were the ages of our forefathers, who broke their fasts with herbs and roots; and when they were permitted flesh, eat it only dressed with hunger and fire. Taylor.

She's gone unkindly, and refus'd to cast
One glance to feed me for so long a fast. Dryden's Tyrant. Love.

2. Religious mortification by abstinence; religious humiliation.

We humble ourselves before God this day, not merely by the outward solemnities of a fast, but by afflicting our souls as well as bodies for our sins. Atterbury.

Nor pray'rs nor fasts its stubborn pulse restrain;
Nor tears, for ages, taught to flow in vain. Pope.

FAST. adj. [fæst, Saxon.]

1. Firm; immovable.

He by his strength setteth fast mountains. Psal. lxxv. 6.

Last, the fire and his three sons,
With their four wives; and God made fast the door. Milton.

Be sure to find,
What I foretold thee, many a hard assay
Of dangers and adversities, and pains,
Ere thou of Israel's sceptre get fast hold. Milton.

2. Strong; impregnable.

England, by report of the chronicles, was infested with robbers and outlaws; which, lurking in woods and fast places, used often to break forth to rob and spoil. Spenser on Ireland.

3. Fixed; adhering; not separable.

Lodronius, with the breaking in of the horsemen, was driven into a marsh; where, after that he, being almost fast in the deep mud, had done the uttermost, he yielded himself. Knolles.

A man in a boat, who tugs at a rope that's fast to a ship, looks as if he resolved to draw the ship to him. Temple.

5. Firm in adherence.

Quick wits be in desire new-fangled; in purpose, unconstant; light to promise any thing, ready to forget every thing, both benefit and injury; and thereby neither fast to friend, nor fearful to foe. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

6. [from ffest, Welsh, quick.] Speedy; quick; swift. It may be doubted whether this sense be not always adverbial.

This work goeth fast on, and prospereth. Exra, v. 8.

Skill comes so slow, and life so fast doth fly,
We learn so little, and forget so much. Davies.

The prince groweth up fast to be a man, and is of a sweet and excellent disposition: it would be a stain upon you if you should mislead, or suffer him to be misled. Bacon to Villiers.

7. FAST and loose. Uncertain; variable; inconstant; deceitful.

A rope of fair pearl, which now hiding, now hidden by the hair, did, as it were, play at fast and loose each with other, giving and receiving richness. Sidney.

If she perceived by his outward cheer,
That any would his love by talk bewry,
Sometimes she heard him, sometimes stopt her ear,
And play'd fast and loose the live-long day. Fairfax.

The folly and wickedness of men, that think to play fast and loose with God Almighty. L'Estrange.

If they cohered, yet by the next conflict with other atoms they might be separated again; and so on in an eternal vicissitude of fast and loose, without ever confociating into the huge condense bodies of planets. Bentley.

FAST. adv.

1. Firmly; immoveably.

Bind the boy, which you shall find with me, Shakespeare's King John.
Fast to the chair.

This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply when they have judg'd me fast asleep. Shak.

2. Closely; nearly. In this sense it is united with some other word, as by, or beside.

Barbarossa left fourteen galleys in the lake; but the tacklings, sails, oars, and ordnance he had laid up in the cattle fast by. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Siloa's brook that flow'd
Fast by, the oracle of God. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Let purling streams be in her fancy seen,
And flow'ry meads, and vales of cheerful green;

And in the midst of deathless groves
Soft sighing wishes lie,
And smiling hopes fast by,

And just beyond 'em ever-living loves. Dryden.
Fast by the throne obsequious fame resides,

And wealth incessant rolls her golden tides. Pope.
Well-known to me the palace you inquire:

For fast beside it dwells my honour'd fire. Pope's Ode.
Here o'er the martyr-king the marble weeps,

And fast beside him once fear'd Edward sleeps. Pope.

3. Swiftly; nimbly.

I would give a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou can'st. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

There streams a spring of blood so fast,
From those deep wounds, as all embur'd the face.

The heaviest muse the swiftest course has gone,
As clocks run fastest when most lead is on. Pope.

You are to look upon me as one going fast out of the world. Swift to Pope.

4. Frequently.

Being tried only with a promise, he gave full credit to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered.

Hammnd's Practical Catechism.
To FASTEN. v. a. [from fast.]

1. To make fast; to make firm; to fix immoveably.

A mantle coming under her right arm, and cosockets. Exodus.

By chance a ship was fasten'd to the shore,
Which from old Clusium king Ofnius bore. Dryd.

2. To hold together; to cement; to link.
She had all magnetick force alone,

To draw and fasten sundry parts in one. Donne.
In the sea-coast of India there is no iron, which flies not like a bird unto those mountains, and therefore their ships are fastened with wood. Brown.

3. To affix; to conjoin.
The words Whig and Tory have been pressed to the service of many successions of parties, with very different ideas fastened to them. Swift's Exam.

4. To stamp; to impress; to fix.
Thinking, by this face,
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;

But 'tis not so. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

5. To unite inseparably.
Their oppressors have changed the scene, and combated the opinions in their true shape, upon which they could not so well fasten their disguise.

6. To lay on with strength.
Could he fasten a blow, or make a thrust, when not suffered to approach? Dryden's Æn. Dedec.

To FASTEN. v. n. To fix himself.
This paucity of blood may be observed in other sorts of lizards, in frogs, and other fishes; and therefore an horseleech will hardly fasten upon a fish. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

He fasten'd on my neck; and bellow'd out,
As he'd burst heaven. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The wrong judgment that misleads us, and makes the will often fasten on the worse side, lies in misreporting upon comparisons. Locke.

FASTENER. n. f. [from fasten.] One that makes fast or firm.

F A T

FASTIDIOUS. adj. [from fastidiosus, Latin; fastidieux, French.] Disdainful; iqueamish; delicate to a vice; insensibly nice.

Reasons plainly delivered, and always after one manner, especially with fine and fastidious minds, enter but heavily and dully. Bacon's Collee.

Let their fastidious vain
Commission of the brain,
Run on and rage, sweat, censure, and condemn

They were not made for thee, lest thou for them.

A squeamish fastidious niceness, in meats and drinks, must be cured by starving. L'Estrange.

All hopes, raised upon the promises or supposed kindnesses of the fastidious and fallacious great ones of the world, shall fail. South's Sermons.

FASTIDIOUSLY. adv. [from fastidious.] Disdainfully; contemptuously; iqueamishly.

Their sole talent is pride and scorn: they look fastidiously, and speak disdainfully, concluding, if a man shall fall short of their garniture at their knees and elbows, he is much inferior to them in the furniture of his head. Gov of the Tongue.

FASTIGIATED. adj. [from fastigatus, Latin.] Roofed; narrowed up to the top. Dict.

FASTINGDAY. n. f. [from fast and day.] Day of mortification by religious abstinence.

day of extraordinary devotion and of alms. Taylor.

FASTNESS. n. f. [from fast.]

1. State of being fast.

2. Firmness; firm adherence.
Such as had given the king distaste, did contend by their forwardness to shew it was but their fastness to the former government, and that those affections ended with the time. Bacon.

3. Strength; security.
All the places are cleared, and places of fastness laid open, which are the proper walls and castles of the Irish, as they were of the British in the times of Agricola. Davies on Ireland.

The foes had left the fastness of their place,
Prevail'd in fight, and had his men in chase. Dry.

4. A strong place; a place not easily forced.
If his adversary be not well aware of him, he entrenches himself in a new fastness, and holds out the siege with a new artillery. Watts on the Mind.

5. Closeness; conciseness; not diffusion. Not used.

Bring his stile from all loose grossness to such firm fastness in Latin, as in Demosthenes.

FASTUOUS. adj. [from fastuosus, Latin; fastueux, French.] Proud; haughty.

FAT. adj. [from fat, Saxon.]

1. Fullness; plump; fleshy: the contrary to lean.

When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag, and the fattest, I think, 't' th' forest. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Let our wives
Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow. Shakef.

'Tis a fine thing to be fat and smooth. L'Estr.

Spare diet and labour will keep constitutions, where this disposition is the strongest, from being fat: you may see in an army forty thousand footsoldiers without a fat man; and I dare affirm, that by plenty and rest twenty of the forty shall grow fat. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Coarse; gross. [from fat, French.]

We're hurry'd down
This lubrique and adult'rate age;

Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,
T' increase the steaming ordures of the stage.

3. Dull.

F A T

O souls! in whom no heav'nly fire is found,
Fat minds, and ever-groveling on the ground. Dryden's Pers.

4. Wealthy; rich.

Some are allured to law, not on the contemplation of equity, but on the promising and pleasing thoughts of litigious terms, fat contentions, and flowing fees. Milton.

These were terrible alarms to persons grown fat and wealthy by a long and successful imposture.

A fat benefice is that which so abounds with an estate and revenues, that a man may expend a great deal in delicacies of eating and drinking. South.

FAT. n. f. An oily and sulphureous part of the blood, deposited in the cells of the membrana adiposa, from the innumerable little vessels which are spread amongst them. The fat is to be found immediately under the skin, in most parts of the body. There are two sorts of fat; one yellow, soft, and lax, easily melted; another firm, white, brittle, and not so easily melted, called suet or tallow.

Some reckon the marrow of the bones for a third sort of fat. Quincy.

In this ointment the strangest and hardest ingredients to come by, are the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburied, and the fats of a boar and a bear, killed in the act of generation. Bacon's Natural History.

This membrane separates an oily liquor called fat: when the fibres are lax, and the aliment too redundant, great part of it is converted into this oily liquor. Arbutnot on Aliments.

To FAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To make fat; to fatten; to make plump and fleshy with abundant food.

Oh how this villainy
Doth fat me with the very thoughts of it!

terns, and tanners fat. Woodward on Fossils.

FATAL. adj. [from fatalis, Latin; fatal, French.]

1. Deadly; mortal; destructive; causing destruction.

O fatal maid! thy marriage is endow'd
With Phrygian, Latian, and Rutilian blood. Dryden's Æneid.

A palsy in the brain is most dangerous; when it seizeth the heart, or organs of breathing, fatal.

2. Proceeding by destiny; inevitable; necessary.

Others delude their trouble by a graver way of reasoning, that these things are fatal and necessary, it being in vain to be troubled at that which we cannot help. Tillotson.

3. Appointed by destiny.

It was fatal to the king to fight for his money;
and though he avoided to fight with enemies abroad, yet he was still enforced to fight for it with rebels at home. Bacon's Henry VII.

F A T

It was Still fatal to stout Hudibras,
In all his feats of arms, when least
He dreamt of it, to prosper best. Hudibras.
Behold the destin'd place of your abodes;
For thus Anchises prophecy'd of old,
And thus our fatal place of rest foretold.

Dryden's Æn.

O race divine;
For beauty still is fatal to the line. Dryden.
FATALIST. n. f. [from fate.] One who maintains that all things happen by inevitable necessity.
Will the obstinate fatalists find sufficient apology?
FATALITY. n. f. [fatalité, Fr. from fatal.]
1. Predestination; predetermined order or series of things and events; preordination of inevitable causes acting invincibly in perpetual succession.

The stoicks held a fatality, and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter. South.

2. Decree of fate.
By a strange fatality men suffer their dissenting to be drawn into the stream of the present regime. King Charles.

All the father's precaution could not secure the son from the fatality of dying by a lion. L'Estrange.

3. Tendency to danger; tendency to some great or hazardous event.

Seven times seven, or forty-nine, nine times nine, or eighty-one, and seven times nine, or the year sixty-three, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown.

FATALLY. adv. [from fatal.]
1. Mortality; destructively, even to death.
The stream is so transparent, pure and clear,
That had the self enamour'd youth gaz'd here,
So fatally deceiv'd he had not been,
While he the bottom, not his face, had seen. Denham.

'Tis the procession of a funeral vow,
Which cruel laws to Indian wives allow,
When fatally their virtue they approve;
Cheerful in flames, and martyrs of their love. Dryden's Aurea.

2. By the decree of fate; by inevitable and invincible determination.

To say that the world was made casually by the concurrence of atoms, is to affirm that the atoms compos'd the world mechanically and fatally; only they were not sensible of it. Bentley.

FATALNESS. n. f. [from fatal.] Invincible necessity.

FATE. n. f. [fatum, Latin.]
1. Destiny; an eternal series of successive causes.

Necessity or chance
Approach not me; and what I will is fate. Milt.
There is a necessity in fate

Why still the brave bold man is fortunate. Dryden.
You must obey me soon or late;
Why will you vainly struggle with your fate! Dryden.

When empire in its childhood first appears,
A watchful fate o'ersees its rising years. Dryden.
Random chance, or wilful fate,
Guides the shaft from Cupid's bow. A. Phillips.

2. Event predetermined.

A chapel crown'd, 'till in the common fate
Th' adjoining abbey fell. Denham.

Looking, he feeds alone his famish'd eyes;
Feeds ling'ring death, but looking not he dies;
Yet still he chose the longest way to fate,
Wasting at once his life and his estate. Dryden.

Courage uncertain dangers may abate;
But who can bear th' approach of certain fate! Dryden.

The whizzing arrow sings,
And bears thy fate, Antinous, on its wings. Pope.

F A T

4. Cause of death.
With full force his deadly bow he bent,
And feather'd fates among the mules and sumpters sent. Dryden.

FATED. adj. [from fate.]
1. Decreed by fate.

She fled her father's rage, and with a train,
Driv'n by the southern blasts, was fated here to reign. Dryden.

2. Determined in any manner by fate.
Her awkward love indeed was oddly fated;
She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.

3. Endued with any quality by fate. This stricture used by Dryden is unusual.
Bright Vulcanian arms,
Fated from force of steel of Stygian charms,
Suspended thence on high. Dryden's Æn.

4. Invested with the power of fatal determination. Peculiar to Shakspeare.
Thy fated sky
Gives us free scope. Shakspeare.

FATHER. n. f. [faðer, Saxon. This word is found likewise in the Persian language.]
1. He by whom the son or daughter is begotten.

Father is a notion superinduced to the substance, or man, and refers only to an act of that thing called man, whereby he contributed to the generation of one of his own kind. Locke.

Son of Benfalem, thy father saith it; the man by whom thou hast breath and life speaketh the word. Bacon.

He shall forget
Father and mother, and to his wife adhere. Milt.

I am in parliament pledge for his truth,
And lasting fealty to the new-made king. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Let my sovereign
Command my eldest son, nay all my sons,
As pledges of my fealty and love. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Man disobeying,
Disloyal, breaks his fealty, and thus Against the high supremacy of Heav'n. Milton.

Each bird and beast behold
After their kind: I bring them to receive From thee their names, and pay thee fealty
With low subjection. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Whether his first design be to withdraw
Our fealty from God, or to disturb Conjugal love. Milton's Paradise Lost.

FEA

See, pious king, with diff'rent strife,
Thy struggling Albion's bosom torn :
So much the fears for William's life,
That Mary's fate she dare not mourn.
FEARFUL. adj. [fear and full.]
1. Timorous; timid; easily made afraid.
He's gentle, and not fearful. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Them that are of a fearful heart. Isaiah.
2. Afraid. It has of before the object of fear.
The Irish are more fearful to offend the law than the English. Davies on Ireland.
I have made my heroine fearful of death, which neither Callandra nor Cleopatra would have been.
Dryden.

3. Awful; to be revered.
Who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises!
4. Terrible; dreadful; frightful; impressing fear.

Neither fast to friend, nor fearful to foe.
Abraham's Schoolmaster.
Against such monsters God maintained his own,
by fearful execution of extraordinary judgment upon them. Hooker.

What God did command touching Canaan, concerning not us any otherwise than only as a fearful pattern of his just displeasure. Hooker.

All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement
Inhabits here: some heav'nly powder guide us
Out of this fearful country. Shakespeare's Tempest.
It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Hebrews, x. 31.

Lay down by those pleasures the fearful and dangerous thunders and lightnings, the horrible and frequent earthquakes, and then there will be found no comparison. Raleigh.

This is the natural fruit of sin, and the present revenge which it takes upon sinners, besides that fearful punishment which shall be inflicted on them in another life. Tillotson.

FEARFULLY. adv. [from fearful.]
1. Timorously; in fear.
In such a night

Did this fearful o'ertrip the dew,
And saw the lion's shadow. Shakesp. Merch. of Ven.
2. Terribly; dreadfully.

There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully on the confined deep.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

FEARFULNESS. n. f. [from fearful.]
1. Timorosity; habitual timidity.
2. State of being afraid; awe; dread.

Is it credible that the acknowledgement of our own unworthiness, our professed fearfulness to ask any thing, otherwise than only for his sake to whom God can deny nothing, that this should be noted for a popish error? Hooker.

A third thing that makes a government justly despised, is fearfulness, and mean compliances with, bold popular offenders. South.

FEARLESSLY. adv. [from fearless.] Without terror; intrepidly.

'Tis matter of the greatest astonishment to observe the stupid, yet common boldness of men, who so fearlessly expose themselves to this most formidable of perils. Decay of Piet.

FEARLESSNESS. n. f. [from fearless.] Exemption from fear; intrepidity; courage; boldness.

He gave instances of an invincible courage, and fearlessness in danger. Clarendon.

FEARLESS. adj. [from fear.] Free from fear; intrepid; courageous; bold: with of before the subject.

From the ground the fearfuls doth arise,
And walked forth without suspect of crime.
Fairy Queen.

The flaming seraph, fearfuls, though alone
Encompass'd round with foes, thus answer'd bold.
Milton.

A nation, whose distinguishing character it is to be more fearfuls of death and danger than any other.
Temple.

FEASIBILITY. n. f. [from feasible.]
1. Practicability.
2. A thing practicable.

Men often swallow falsities for truths, dubiousities for certainties, possibilities for feasibilitys, and things impossible for possibilities themselves.

FEASIBLE. adj. [feasible, French.] Practicable; such as may be effected; such as may be done. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We conclude many things impossibilities, which yet are easy feasibilitys. Glanville's Sceptis.

Things are feasible in themselves; else the natural wisdom of God would never have advised, and much less have commanded them. South.

FEASIBLY. adv. [from feasible.] Practicably.

FEAST. n. f. [feste, Fr. festum, Lat.]
1. An entertainment of the table; a sumptuous treat of great numbers.

Here's our chief guest. If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Oh Pharaoh's birthday he made a feast unto all his servants. Gen. xl. 20.

The lady of the leaf ordain'd a feast,
And made the lady of the flow'r her guest;
When lo! a bow'r ascended on the plain,
With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train. Dryden.

2. An anniversary day of rejoicing either on a civil or religious occasion. Opposed to a fast.
This day is call'd the feast of Crispian.
Shakespeare's Henry V.

3. Something delicious to the palate.
Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.

TO FEAST. v. n. [from the noun.] To eat sumptuously; to eat together on a day of joy.
Richard and Northumberland, great friends,
Did feast together. Shakesp. Henry IV.

The parish finds, indeed; but our churchwardens
Feast on the silver, and give us the farthings. Gay.

TO FEAST. v. a.
1. To entertain sumptuously; to entertain magnificently.

He was entertained and feasted by the king with great shew of favour. Hayward.

2. To delight; to pamper; to gratify luxuriously.

All these are our's, all nature's excellence,
Whose taste or smell can bless the feasted sense.
Dryden.

FEASTER. n. f. [from feast.]
1. One that fares deliciously.

Those feasters could speak of great and many excellencies in manna. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

2. One that entertains magnificently.

FEASTFUL. adj. [feast and full.]
1. Festive; joyful.

The virgins also shall on feastful days
Visit his tomb with flowers, only bewailing
His lot unfortunate in nuptial choice,
From whence captivity and loss of eyes.
Milton's Agonistes.

Therefore be sure
Thou, when the bridegroom with his feastful friends

Passes to bliss at the mid-hour of night,
Hast gain'd thy entrance, virgin wife and pure.
Milton.

2. Luxurious; riotous.
The fuitor train
Who crowd his palace, and with lawless pow'r
His herds and flocks in feastful rites devour.
Pope's Odyssey.

FEASTRITE. n. f. [feast and rite.] Custom observed in entertainments.

His hospitable gate,
Unbarr'd to all, invites a numerous train
Of daily guests; whose board with plenty crown'd, Revives the feastrites old. Philips.

FEAT. n. f. [fait, French.]
1. Act; deed; action; exploit.

Pyrocles is his name, renowned far
For his bold feats, and hardy confidence;
Full oft approved in many a cruel war.
Fairy Queen.

Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee: in that day's feat,
When he might act the woman in the scene,
He prov'd th' best man i' th' field.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Our soldiers are men of strong heads for action, and perform such feats as they are not able to express. Addison's Spectator.

2. A trick; an artful, festive, or ludicrous performance.

The joints are more subtle to all feats of activity and motion in youth than afterwards. Bacon's Essays.

FEAT. adj. [fait, bien fait, French; homo factus ad unguem.]
1. Ready; skilful; ingenious.

Never matter had
A page so kind, so duteous, diligent;
So tender over his occasions, true,
So feat, so nurse-like. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. It is now only used in irony and contempt.
That feat man at controversy. Stillingfleet.

3. Nice; neat.
Look how well my garments fit upon me,
Much feater than before. Shakespeare's Tempest.

dexterously. Not in use.

And with fingers crompt full feateously
The tender stalks on high. Spenser.

FEATHER. n. f. [fedep, Saxon; feder, German.]
1. The plume of birds.

Look, as I blow this feather from my face.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The brave eagle does with forrow see
The forest wasted, and that lofty tree
Which holds her nest, about to be o'erthrown,
Before the feathers of her young are grown;
She will not leave them, nor she cannot stay,
But bears them boldly on her wings away.
Waller.

When a man in the dark presses either corner of his eye with his finger, and turns his eye away from his finger, he will see a circle of colours like those in the feathers of a peacock's tail.

FEATHER. n. f. [from the noun.]
I am bright as an angel, and light as a feather.
Swift.

2. Kind; nature; species: from the proverbial expression, birds of a feather; that is, of a species.

Clifford and the haught Northumberland,
And of their feather many more proud birds,
Have wrought the easy-melting king like wax.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

I am not of that feather to shake off
My friend, when he most needs me.
Shakespeare's Timon.

3. An ornament; an empty title.

4. [Upon a horse.] A sort of natural frizzling of hair, which, in some places, rises above the lying hair, and there makes a figure resembling the the tip of an ear of corn. Farrier's Dict.

TO FEATHER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To dress in feathers.

2. To fit with feathers.

3. To tread as a cock.
Dame Partlet was the sovereign of his heart;
Ardent in love, outrageous in his play,
He feather'd her a hundred times a-day. Dryden.

4. To enrich; to adorn; to exalt.
They stuck not to say, that the king cared not to plume his nobility and people, to feather himself.
Bacon's Henry VII.

5. TO FEATHER ONE'S NEST. [Alluding to birds which collect feathers, among other materials, for making their nests.] To get riches together.

FEATHERBED. n. f. [feather and bed.] A bed stuffed with feathers; a soft bed.

The husband cock looks out, and strait is sped,
And meets his wife, which brings her featherbed.
Donna.

FEATHERDRIVER. n. f. [feather and drive.]
VOL. I. N° 17. 4 M One

FEA

A featherdriver had the residue of his lungs filled with the fine dust or down of feathers.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

FEATHERED. adj. [from feather.]

1. Clothed with feathers.

I saw young Harry with his beaver on,
His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

So when the new-born Phoenix first is seen,
Her feather'd subjects all adore their queen. Dry.
Dark'ning the sky, they hover o'er, and throud
The wanton failors with a feather'd cloud. Prior.
Then ships of uncouth form shall stem the tide,
And feather'd people crowd my wealthy side.

Pope.

Vultures, harpies, ravens, cormorants, and,
among many other feather'd creatures, several little winged boys perch upon the middle arches.

Addison's Spectator.

2. Fitted with feathers; carrying feathers.

An eagle had the mihap to be struck with an arrow, feather'd from her own wing. L'Estrange.
Not the bow they bend, nor boast the skill
To give the feather'd arrow wings to kill.

Pope's Odyssey.

FEATHEREDGE. n. f.

Boards or planks that have one edge thinner than another, are called featheredge stuff.

Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

FEATHEREDGED. adj. [feather and edge.] Belonging to a feather edge.

The cover must be made of featheredged boards, in the nature of several doors with hinges fixed thereon.

Mortimer.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

FEATHER-GRASS. n. f. [gramen pulmosum.] An herb.

FEATHERLESS. adj. [from feather.] Without feathers.

This so high grown ivy was like that featherless bird, which went about to beg plumes of other birds to cover his nakedness. Howell's Vocal Forest.

FEATHERLY. adj. [from feather.] Resembling feather.

The accretion or pluvius aggelation of hail about the mother and fundamental atoms thereof, seems to be some feathery particle of snow, although inow itself be sexangular.

Brown.

FEATHERSELLER. n. f. [feather and seller.] One who sells feathers for beds.

FEATHERY. adj. [from feather.] Cloathed with feathers.

Or whistle from the lodge, or village cock
Count the night-watches to his feathery dames.

Milton.

FEATLY. adv. [from feat.] Neatly; nimbly; dextrously.

Foot it featly here and there,
And sweet sprites the burthen bear. Shak. Temp.
The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That featly footing seem'd to skim the ground.

Dryden.

FEATNESS. n. f. [from feat.] Neatness; nicety; dexterity.

FEATURE. n. f. [feature, old French.]

1. The cast or make of the face.

Report the feature of Octavia, her years.

Shakespeare.

2. Any lineament or single part of the face. Though ye be the fairest of God's creatures, Yet think that death shall spoil your goodly features.

Spenser.

We may compare the face of a great man with the character, and try if we can find out in his looks and features, the haughty, cruel, or unmerciful temper that discovers itself in the history.

Addison on Medals.

Though various features did the sisters grace,
A sister's likeness was in every face. Addison's Ovid.

FEC

TO FEATURE. v. a. To resemble in countenance; to favour.

He liv'd in court most prais'd, most lov'd,
A fample to the young it; to th' more mature,
A glafs that featur'd them. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Harvey on Consumptions.

FEBRUARY. n. f. [Februarius, Latin.] The name of the second month in the year.

You have such a February face,
So full of frost, of storm, and cloudiness!

Shakespeare.

FEACES. n. f. [feces, Latin; feces, French.]

1. Dregs; lees; sediments; subsidence. Hence the surface of the ground with mud and slime besmear'd, the feces of the flood Receiv'd the rays of heav'n; and sucking in
The seeds of heat, new creatures did begin. Dryd.

2. Excrement.

The symptoms of such a constitution are a four smell in their feces.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

FECELENCE. } n. f. [feculentia, Latin.]

FECELENCY. }

1. Muddiness; quality of abounding with lees or sediment.

2. Lees; feces; sediment; dregs. Pour upon it some very strong lee, to facilitate the separation of its feculencies.

Boyle.

Whether the wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw the earth's purest spirit, and resist
Its feculence, which in more porous stocks
Of cyder plants finds passage free.

Philips.

FECELENT. adj. [feculentus, Lat. feculent, Fr.]

Foul; dreggy; excrementitious.

But both his hands, most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And fain'd to wash themselves incessantly,
Yet nothing cleaner were for such intent.

Fairy Queen.

They are to the body as the light of a candle to the grots and feculent snuff, which as it is not pent up in it, so neither doth it partake of its impurity.

Glanville's Apology.

FECOND. [fecundus, Latin; second, French.] prolific.

The more sickly the years are, the less fecund or fruitful of children also they be.

Grant's Bills of Mortality.

She requested these plants as a medicine of fecundation, or to make her fruitful.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO FECUNDIFY. v. a. To make fruitful; to make prolific.

Diët.

FECUNDITY. n. f. [from fecund; fecundus, Fr.]

Fruitfulness; quality of producing or bringing forth in great abundance.

I appeal to the animal and vegetable productions of the earth, the vast numbers whereof notoriously testify the extreme luxuriance and fecundity of it.

Woodward.

2. Power of producing or bringing forth.

Some of the ancients mention some seeds that retain their fecundity forty years; and I have found melon-seeds, after thirty years, are best for raising of melons.

Ray.

God could never create so ample a world, but he could have made a bigger; the fecundity of his creative power never growing barren, nor being exhausted.

Bentley.

FED. Preterite and participle pass. of To feed. For on the grassy verdure as he lay,
And breath'd the freshness of the early day,
Devouring dogs the helpless infant tore,
Fed on his trembling limbs, and lapp'd the gore.

Pope.

FE'DARY. n. f. [fedus, Latin, or from feudum.] This word, peculiar to Shakespeare, may signify either a confederate; a partner; or a dependent.

Damn'd paper!

Black as the ink that's on thee, senseless bauble!
Art thou a fedary for this act, and lookest
So virgin-like without? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FE'DERAL. adj. [from fedus, Latin.] Relating to a league or contract.

It is a federal rite betwixt God and us, as eating and drinking, both among Jews and Heathens, was wont to be.

Hammond.

The Romans compelled them, contrary to all federal right and justice, both to part with Sardinia, their lawful territory, and also to pay them for the future a double tribute.

Grew.

FE'DERARY. n. f. [from fedus, Latin.] A confederate; an accomplice.

She's a traitor, and Camillo it is A fedary with her.

Shakespeare.

FE'DERATE. adj. [federatus, Latin.] Leagued; joined in confederacy.

FEE. n. f. [feoh, Saxon; fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgement of any service, or payment of any rent to any other.

Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord.

And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum: for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him.

So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has ius perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own.

Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seized in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seized to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special; general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special, is that where a man and his wife are seized of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies.

Cowel.

Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
Or sell fee-simples in his master's name.

Hubbard's Tale.

Here's the lord of the foil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

2. Property; peculiar. What concern they?
The general cause? or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. Reward; gratification; recompence.

These

These be the ways by which, without reward
Livings in courts be gotten, though full hard;
For nothing there is done without a fee.

Hubbard's Tale.

Not helping, death's my fee;
But if I help, what do you promise me? Shakesp.
4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.

Now that God and friends
Have turned my captive state to liberty,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?

Shakespere's Henry VI.

5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.
He does not refuse doing a good office for a man, because he cannot pay the fee of it.

Addison's Spectator.

6. Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.
In pruning and trimming all manner of trees,
Reserve to each cattle their property fees. Tusser.
FE'EFARM. n. f. [fee and farm.] Tenure by which lands are held from a superiour lord.

John furrendered his kingdoms to the pope, and took them back again, to hold in feefarm;
which brought him into such hatred, as all his lifetime after he was posselt with fear. Davies.

To FEE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To reward; to pay.
No man fees the sun, no man purchases the light,
nor errs if he walks by it. South.

Watch the disease in time; for when within
The dropsy rages and extends the skin,
In vain for hellebore the patient cries,
And fees the doctor; but too late is wife.

Dryden's Persius.

2. To bribe; to hire; to purchase.
I have long loved her, and ingrossed opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her.

Shakespere's Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. To keep in hire.
There's not a thane of them but in his house
I have a servant feed. Shakespere's Macbeth.
FEEBLE. adj. [foible, French.] Weak; debilitated; sickly; infirm; without strength of body or mind.

The men carried all the feeble upon asses to Jericho. 2 Chronicles.

Command th' assistance of a faithful friend,
But feeble are the succours I can send.

Dryden's Aeneid.

How I have lov'd, excuse my fault'ring tongue;
My spirits feeble, and my pains are strong. Dryden.
We carry the image of God in us, a rational and immortal soul; and though we be now miserable and feeble, yet we aspire after eternal happiness, and finally expect a great exaltation of all our natural powers. Bentley.

Rhyme is a crutch that helps the weak along,
Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Smith.
To FEEBLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To weaken; to feeble; to deprive of strength or power. Not in use.

Or as a castle reared high and round,
By subtle engines and malicious slight
Is undermined from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forc'd and feebled quite.

Fairy Queen.

Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement?

Shakespere's King John.

FEEBLEM'NDED. adj. [feeble and mind.] Weak of mind; defective in resolution and constancy.
Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thess.

FEEBLENESS. n. f. [from feeble.] Weakness; imbecility; infirmity; want of strength.

A better head Rome's glorious body fits,
Than his that shakes for age and feebleness.

Shakspere's Titus Andronicus.

Some in their latter years, through the feebleness of their limbs, have been forced to study upon their knees. South.

FEEBLY. adv. [from feeble.] Weakly; without strength.

Like mine, thy gentle numbers feebly creep,
Thy tragick muse gives smiles, thy comick sleep.

Dryden.

To FEED. v. a. [fedan, Gothic; pedan, poedan, Saxon.]

1. To supply with food.
Her heart and bowels through her back he drew,
And fed the hounds that help'd him to pursue.

Dryden.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days,
in which time it eat more than its own weight.

Arbutnot on Diet.

2. To supply; to furnish.
A constant smoke rises from the warm springs that feed the many baths with which this island is stocked.

Addison.

The breadth of the bottom of the hopper must be half the length of a barleycorn, and near as long as the rollers, that it may not feed them too fast.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. To graze; to consume by cattle.
Once in three years feed your mowing lands, if you cannot get manure constantly to keep them in heart.

Mortimer.

The frost will spoil the grass; for which reason take care to feed it close before winter.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. To nourish; to cherish.
How oft from pomp and state did I remove,
To feed despair, and cherish hopeless love? Prior.

5. To keep in hope or expectation.
Barbarossa learned the strength of the emperor,
craftily feeding him with the hope of liberty.

Knolles.

6. To delight; to entertain; to keep from satiety.

The alteration of scenes, so it be without noise, feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object.

Bacon.

7. To make fat. A provincial use.
To FEED. v. n.

1. To take food. Chiefly applied to animals food.

To feed were best at home;
From thence the sawce to meet is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it.

Shakspere's Macbeth.

2. To prey; to live by eating.
I am not covetous of gold;
Nor care I, who doth feed upon my cost.

Shakspere's Henry V.

You cry against the noble senate, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else
Would feed on one another. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Galen speaketh of the curing of the scirrhus of the liver by the milk of a cow, that feedeth upon certain herbs. Bacon.

Some birds feed upon the berries of this vegetable.

Brown.

He feeds on fruits, which of their own accord,
The willing grounds and laden trees afford.

Dryden's Virgil.

The Brachmans were all of the same race, lived in fields and woods, and fed only upon rice, milk, or herbs. Temple.

All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy
Th' extensive blessing of his luxury.

Pope's Essay on Man.

3. To pasture; to place cattle to feed.
If a man shall cause a field to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field, he shall make restitution. Exodus, xxii. 5.

4. To grow fat or plump. A provincial use.
FEED. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Food; that which is eaten.

A fearful deer then looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a shrugging kind of tremor through all her principal parts. Sidney.

An old worked ox eats as well as a young one:
their feed is much cheaper, because they eat no oats.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Pasture.
Besides his cote, his flocks and bounds of feed
Are now on sale. Shakspere's As you like it.

3. Meal; act of eating.

Plenty hung
Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill
I spared not: for such pleasure till that hour
At feed or fountain never had I found. Milton.
FE'EDER. n. f. [from feed.]

1. One that gives food.
The beast obeys his keeper, and looks up,
Not to his master's, but his feeder's hands. Darb.

2. An exciter; an encourager.
When thou do'st hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou was't;
The tutor and the feeder of my riots. Shakspere.

3. One that eats.
With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder.

Shakspere.

But that our feasts
In every mews have folly, and the feeders jest with it as a custom, I should blush
To see you so attired. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrush, called the misel-thrush, or feeder upon miselto.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

4. One that eats in a certain mode: as, a misfeeder, a gross feeder.

But such fine feeders are no guests for me;
Riot agrees not with frugality:
Then, that unfashionable man am I,
With me they'd starve for want of ivory.

Dryden's Juvenal.

To FEEL. pret. felt; part. pass. felt. v. n. [feelan, Saxon.]

1. To have perception of things by the touch.
The sense of feeling can give us a notion of extension, shade, and all other ideas that enter at the eye, except colours. Addison's Spectator.

2. To search by feeling. See FEELER.
They should seek the Lord, if happily they might feel after him, and find him. Acts.

3. To have a quick sensibility of good or evil, right or wrong.

Man, who feels for all mankind. Pope.

4. To appear to the touch.
Blind men say black feels rough, and white feels smooth.

Dryden.

Of these tumours one feels flaccid and rumpled;
the other more even, flatulent, and springy.

Sharp's Surgery.

To FEEL. v. a.
1. To perceive by the touch.
Suffer me that I may feel the pillars.

Judges, xxvi. 26.

2. To try; to sound.
He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour.

Shaksp.

3. To have perception of.
The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by.

Raleigh.

4. To have sense of external pain or pleasure.
Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel.

Milton.

But why should those be thought to 'scape who feel.

Those rods of scorpions and those whips of steel?

Milton.

5. To be affected by; to perceive mentally.
Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it! Shaksp.
The well-sung woes shall sooth my pensive ghost;

He best can paint them who can feel them most.

Pope.

Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
E'er felt such grief, such terror, and despair.

Pope.

6. To know; to be acquainted with.
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little.

Shakspere's Hen. VIII.

FEEL. n. f. [from the verb.] The sense of feeling; the touch.

The difference of these tumours will be distinguished by the feel.

Sharp's Surgery.

FEEL. n. f. [from feel.] 1. One that feels.

4 M 2

FEI

This hand, whose touch,
Whose ev'ry touch would force the feeler's soul
To th' oath of loyalty. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

2. The horns or antennæ of insects.
Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennæ; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennæ, I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted. Derham's Physico-Theology.

FEELING. participial adj. [from feel.]

1. Expressive of great sensibility.

O wretched state of man in self-division!

O well thou say'st a feeling declaration

Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision!

Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,

They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney.

Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears

Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,

That may discover such integrity.

Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,

Am pregnant to my good pity.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

I had a feeling sense

Of all your royal favours; but this last

Strikes through my heart. Southerne.

FEELING. n. f. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.

Why was the fight

To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd;

So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,

And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,

That she might look at will through every pore?

Milton.

2. Power of action upon sensibility.

The apprehension of the good,

Gives but the greater feeling to the worse.

Shakespeare's Richard II.

3. Perception; sensibility.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it.

Bacon's Essays.

As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.

FEELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.

The princes might judge that he meant himself, who spake so feelingly. Sidney.

He would not have talked so feelingly of Co-drus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it. Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,

The season's difference; as the icy phang,

And churlish chiding of the winter's wind,

Which when it bites and blows upon my body,

Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,

This is no flattery: these are counsellors,

That feelingly persuade me what I am.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good,
and of the new purchased evil.

Raleigh's History.

FEET. n. f. The plural of foot.

His brother's image to his mind appears,

Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fears. Pope's Statius.

FEETLESS. adj. [from feet.] Being without feet.

Geoffrey of Boullain broched three feetless birds, called Allerions, upon his arrow. Camden.

TO FEIGN. v. a. [from feindre, Fr. feign, Lat.]

1. To invent; to image by an act of the

FEL

Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd, Gorgons, and hydras, and chimæras dire! Milt.
No such things are done as thou sayest, but thou feign'st them out of thine own heart.

Nebemiah, vi. 8.

2. To make a show of.

Both his hands, most filthy feculent,

Above the water were on high extent,

And feign'd to wash themselves incessantly.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

3. To make a shew of; to do upon some false pretence.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,

Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;

But feigns a laugh to see me search around,

And by that laugh the willing fair is found.

Pope.

4. To dissemble: to conceal. Now obsolete.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,

As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear;

Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign.

Fairy Queen.

TO FEIGN. v. n. To relate falsely; to image from the invention; to tell fabulously.

Therefore the poet

Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;

Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,

But musick for the time doth change his nature.

Shakespeare.

FEIGNEDLY. adv. [from feign.] In fiction;
not truly.

Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly
in some of the heathens.

Bacon.

FEIGNER. n. f. [from feign.] Inventer; contriver of a fiction.

And these three voices differ; all the things done, the doing and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning and the feigner; so the poem, the poesy, and the poet. Ben Jonson.

FEINT. participial adj. [from feign, for feigned;
or feint, Fr.] Counterfeit; seeming.

The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it. Locke.

FEINT. n. f. [feint, French.]

1. A false appearance; an offer of something not intended to be.

Courtly's letter is but a feint to get off. Spectator.

2. A mock assault; an appearance of aiming at one part, when another is intended to be struck.

But, in the breast encamp'd, prepares

For well-bred feints and future wars. Prior.

FELANDERS. n. f. Worms in hawks. Answe.

TO FELICITATE. v. a. [felicitor, Fr. felicito, Latin.]

1. To make happy.

I profess

Myself an enemy to all other joys;

And find I am alone felicitate

In your dear highness' love. Shaksp. King Lear.

What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would fill and felicitate his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey! Watts.

2. To congratulate.

They might proceed unto forms of speeches, felicitating the good, or depreciating the evil to follow. Brown.

FELICITATION. n. f. [French, from felicitation.]

Congratulation. Dict.

FELICITOUS. adj. [felix, Lat.] Happy. Dict.

FELICITOUSLY. adv. [from felicitous.] Happily. Dict.

FELICITY. n. f. [felicitas, Latin; felicité, Fr.]

Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin,

And grant that we, for whom thou didest die,

Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,

May live for ever in felicity. Spenser's Sonnets.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity;

But virtue join'd with riches and long life,

In corporal pleasure he, and careless ease.

Milton's Paradise Regained.

FEL

The felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete. Atterbury.

How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel! Rogers.

FELINE. adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is feline, or a long taper.

Grew's Museum.

FELL. adj. [felle, Saxon.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

It seemed fury, discord, madness fell,

Flew from his lap when he unfolds the fame.

Fairfax.

So fellest foes,

Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,

To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakespeare.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.

That instant I was turn'd into a hart,

And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,

E'er since pursue me. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

I know thee, love! wild as the raging main,

More fell than tygers on the Lybian plain.

Pope's Autumn.

Scorning all the taming arts of man,

The keen hyæna, fellest of the fell.

Thomson's Spring.

FELL. n. f. [felle, Saxon.] The skin; the hide.
Not used.

Wipe thine eye;

The gougiers shall devour them, flesh and fell,

Ere they shall make us weep. Shak. King Lear.

The time has been my senses would have cool'd

To hear a night-shriek; and my fall of hair

Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO FELL. v. a. [fellen, German.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.

Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shak.

Up and down he traverses his ground;

Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again.

Daniel.

Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock, and felled him. Raleigh.

His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was felled. Hawell's Vocal Forest.

On their whole host I flew

Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd

Their choicest youth, they only liv'd who fled.

Milton.

2. It seems improperly joined with down or along.
Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him
down,

And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Dryden.

I fell'd along a man of bearded face,

His limbs all cover'd with a shining case.

Dryden's Indian Emperor.

3. To hew down; to cut down.

Then would he seem a farmer that would fell

Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell.

Hubbard's Tale.

Proud Arcite and fierce Palemon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;

Like lightning flam'd their faulchions to and fro,

And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,

There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak.

Dryden.

FELL. The preterite of To fell.

None on their feet might stand,

Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell.

By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.

FELLER. n. f. [from fell.] One that hews down.

Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us. If, xiv. 8.

FELLYFLOUS. adj. [fel and fluo, Lat.] Flowing with gall. Dict.

FELLMONCER. n. f. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.

FELL-

FEL

FELLNESS. n. f. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very fellness loud he 'gan to weep.

Fairy Queen.

FELLOW. n. f. [felge, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written felly or felly.

Out, out, thou trumpet Fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellys from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n.

Shakespeare.

Axle-trees, naves, fellys and spokes were all molten.

Kings.

FELLOW. n. f. [quasi, to follow, Misfellow; from pe, faith, and lag, bound, Saxon, Junius; fallow, Scottish.]

1. A companion; one with whom we consort.
In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end.

Afribani's Schoolmaster.

To be your fellow,

You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no.

Shakespeare. Tempest.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One foul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love?

Dryden.

2. An associate; one united in the same affair.

Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabric mounts the walls.

Dryden's Virgil.

3. One of the same kind.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fellows prey.

Waller.

A shepherd had one favourite dog; he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of his fellows.

L'Estrange.

4. Equal; peer.

So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer servants.

Sidney.

Chieftain of the rest

I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now.

Fairfax.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.
When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice; the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows.

Addison's Spectator.

6. One like or equal to another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness: sometimes with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.

—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow.

Shakespeare.

An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made him peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns.

Bacon's Apophthegms.

Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows

With fire and sword the fort maintain;

Each was a Hercules, you tell us,

Yet out they march'd like common men.

Prior.

8. A word of contempt: the foolish mortal;
the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.

Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal Justice to make them suffer death by their hands.

Sidney.

Cassio hath here been set on in the dark

By Roderigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd.

Shakespeare.

I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks
he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows.

Shakespeare. Tempest.

Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;

FEL

And left me in reputel's banishment,
A fellow of no mark or likelihood.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

How oft the fight of means, to do ill deeds, Makes deeds ill done? for hadst thou not been by,

A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and signed to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind.

Shakespeare's King John.

The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous knave,

Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow!

Shakespeare.

The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet.

L'Estrange.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian feed

By fraud and theft asserts his father's breed.

Dryden.

You would wonder how such an ordinary fellow as this Mr. Wood, could have got his majesty's broad seal.

Swift.

You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobbler-like, the parson will be drunk,

Worth makes the man, and want of it the fel- low;

The rest is all but leather and prunella.

Pope.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.

The provost commanded his men to hang him upon the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man.

Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues, or of any incorporated society.

There should be a million of three of the fellows or brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were designed.

Bacon.

To FELLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with;
to match. Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

Imagination,

With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing.

Shakespeare's Wint. Tale.

FELLOW-COMMONER. n. f.

1. One who has the same right of common.
He cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellow-commoners, all mankind.

Locke.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.

FELLOW-CREATURE. n. f. One that has the same creator.

Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminencies whereby we are raised above our fellow-creatures, the brutes, in this lower world.

Watts's Logic, Introduction.

FELLOW-HEIR. n. f. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.

The Gentiles should be fellow-heirs.

Eph. iii. 6.

FELLOW-HELPER. n. f. Coadjutor; one who conspires in the same business.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth.

3 John, i.

FELLOW-LABOURER. n. f. One who labours
in the same design.

My fellow-labourers have commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

FELLOW-SERVANT. n. f. One that has the same master.

Nor less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire Gladly into the ways of God with man.

Milton.

Fare fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dawns we serve.

Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly master where they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children.

Atterbury.

FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. f. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

FEL

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.

Shakespeare.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier.

Phil. ii. 25.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. f. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

I pry'thee, do not mock me, fellow-student.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over to your acquaintance.

Watts's Logic.

FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. f. One who lives under the same government.

The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends.

Swift.

FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. f. One who shares in the same evils; one who partakes the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve?

Dryden.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow- sufferers.

FELLOW-WRITER. n. f. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it into their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them.

Addison.

FELLOW-FEELING. n. f. [fellow and feeling.]

1. Sympathy.

It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellow-feeling of the misfortune of my brother.

L'Estrange.

2. Combination; joint interest; commonly in an ill sense.

Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fellow-feeling.

Arbuth. History of John Bull.

FELLOWLIKE. } adj. [fellow and like.] Like

FELLOWLY. } a companion; on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

One seed for another to make an exchange,
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange.

Tissot.

FELLOWSHIP. n. f. [from fellow.]

1. Companionship; consort; society.
This boy cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

From blissful bow'rs
Of amaranthine shade, fountain, or spring,
By th' waters of life, where'er they sat
In fellowships of joy, the sons of light

Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship.

Calamy's Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination, and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cement-er of society.

Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.
We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solid agreement amongst themselves.

Hacker.

Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of the war.

Kolles's History of the Turks.

3. Equality.

4. Partnership; joint interest.

Nearer

FEL

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load.

Paradise Regain'd.
O love! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
And will not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

5. Company; state of being together.
The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellow-ship. But hark, a fail!

Shakespeare's Othello.
6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.
In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellow-ship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon's Essays.

7. Fitness and fondness for feistal entertainments, with good prefixed.

He had by his excessive good fellow-ship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarend.

8. An establishment in the college, with share in its revenue.

Corufodes having, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty pounds out of a beggarly fellow-ship, went to London. Swift.

9. [In arithmetic.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocker's Arithmetic.

FELLY. adj. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tyger, that with greediness

Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast doth felly him oppress. Spens. Sonnets.

FEL-DE-SE. n. f. [In law.] He that commit-teth felony by murdering himself.

FELON. n. f. [felon, French; felo, low Latin;
fel, Saxon.]

1. One who has committed a capital crime.
I apprehend thee for a felon here.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
The wily fox,

Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murd'rous deed. Dryden.

2. A whitlow; a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.

The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wise man's Surgery.

FELON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.

Ayme! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,

Might be the cause of so impatient plight!
What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,

Hath stirred up so mischievous despatch! Spenser.
Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate.

Pope's Odyssey.
FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traittorous; villainous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.

This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Watson.

O thievish night!

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars

That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light

To the misfied and lonely traveller? Milton.
In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies. Dryd.

FELONIOUSLY. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.

FELONOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; felonious. Not used.

I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonous force of mine enemy. Spens. Poet.

male.

God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Gen. i. 27.

If he offer it of the herd, whether it be male or female, he shall offer it without blemish. Leviticus.

Men, more divine,
Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,

Are masters to their females, and their lords.
Shakespeare.

FEMALE. adj.
1. Not male.

Female of sex it seems. Milton.
Swarming next appear'd

The female bee, that feeds her husband drone. Milton.

2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.

Other fuses, perhaps,
With their attendant moons thou wilt descry,

Communicating male and female light;
Which two great sexes animate the world. Milton.

Add what wants
In female sex, the more to draw his love. Milton.

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,

But fondly overcome with female charms. Milton.
If by a female hand he had foreseen

He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance or double ax of the fair warrior queen. Dryden.

3. FEMALE Rhymes. Double rhymes so called, because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in a weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of the latter poems.

Dryden's Preface to Ann. Mirab.
FEME COVERT. n. f. [Fr.] A married woman who feminine, and subjected to ease and delicacy. Richard's History.

FEN

FEMININE. n. f. A she; one of the sex that brings young; a female.

O! why did God create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect

Of nature? And not fill the world at once
With men, as angels, without femininity? Milow.

FEMORAL. adj. [femorali, Latin.] Belonging to the thigh.

The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation. Sharp's Surgery.

FEN. n. f. [fenn, Saxon; venne, Dutch.] A marsh; low flat and moist ground; a moor;
a bog.

Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbot's Description of the World.

I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen

Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than fen. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The surface is of black fen earth. Woodw. on Fes.

He to Portina's wat'ry marshes went;
A long canal the muddy fen divides,

And with a clear unfully'd current glides. Addis.
FENBERRY. n. f. [fen and berry.] A kind of blackberry. Skinner.

FENCE. n. f. [from defence.]

1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.

That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Piety.

There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange.

To put them out of their parents view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.

Let us bear this awful corps to Cæsar,
And lay it in his fight, that it may stand

A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addison's Cato.

2. Inclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main;

Th' eternal fences overleap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden's Hor.

Shall I mention make
Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?

Or the disdaining sea, that, shut from thence,
Roars round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden.

Employ their wives and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surprize the fair. Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.

I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a matter of fence. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. Skill in defence.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shakespeare.

To FENCE. v. a.

1. To inclose; to secure by an inclosure or hedge.

Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain Destroyed have, each field to waste is laid;

In fenced towers stowed is their grain,
Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade. Fairf.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass,
and set darkness in my paths. Job, xix. 8.

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hath fenced me with bones and sinews. Job, x. 11.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Mac. xii. 13.

See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail, or other inclosure. Ayliffe's Paragon.

2. To guard; to fortify.

So much of adders wisdom I have learnt,
To fence my ear against thy forceries. Milt. Agonist.

With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,
Fenc'd from the thorns, and trod the deep descent. Dryden.

To FENCE. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons. Ho

FEN

He having got some iron, should have it beaten into fwords, and put into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.

If a throffle fang, he falls strait a capering: He will fence with his own shadow.

Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred; The stooping warriors aiming head to head, Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful found The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound; They fence and push, and, pushing, loudly roar, Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore. Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamesters company. Locke.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplay.

Arbutnot and Pope.

FENCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without inclosure; open.

Each motion of the heart rises to fury, And love in their weak bosoms is a rage As terrible as hate, and as destructive: So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean, And heaves the billows of the boiling deep, Alike from North, from South. Roscoe's Jane Shore.

FENCER. n. f. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmness is great advantage; he that lets Another chafe, may warm him at his fire.

Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets; As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.

A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.

FENCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence. Addison.

FENCINGMASTER. n. f. [from fence and master.] One who teaches the science of defence, or the use of weapons.

FENCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [from fence and school.] A place in which the use of weapons is taught.

If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing-school, and every day exercising. Locke.

FEN-CRICKET. n. f. [from fen and cricket.] An insect that digs itself holes in the ground.

To FEND. v. a. [from fend.] To keep off; to shut out.

Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold, With fern beneath to fend the bitter cold. Dryden's Virgil.

To FEND. v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.

The dexterous management of terms, and being able to fend and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

FENDER. n. f. [from fend.]

1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.

2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.

FENERATION. n. f. [from feneratio, Latin.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.

2. Zeal; passion; ardour.

FERVIDNESS. n. f. [from fervid.] Ardour of mind; zeal; passion.

As to the healing of Malchus's ear, in the account of the meek Lamb of God, it was a kind of injury done to him by the fervidness of St. Peter, who knew not yet what spirit he was of. Beasley's Sermon.

FERULA. n. f. [ferule, French; from ferula, giant fennel, Latin.] An instrument of correction with which young scholars are beaten on the hand: so named because anciently the stalks of fennel were used for this purpose.

These differ as much as the rod and ferula. Shakspeare's Grammar.

To FERULE. v. a. To chastise with the ferula.

FERVOUR. n. f. [fervor, Latin; fervour, Fr.]

1. Heat; warmth.

Were it an undeniable truth that an effectual fervour proceeded from this star, yet would not the same determine the opinion. Brown's Vul. Err.

Like bright Aurora, whose refulgent ray

Foretells the fervour of ensuing day,

And warns the shepherd with his flocks retreat

To leafy shadows, from the threatened heat. Waller.

These silver drops, like morning dew,

Foretell the fervour of the day;

So from one cloud soft show'rs we view,

And blasting lightnings burst away. Pope.

2. Heat of mind; zeal.

Odious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason so great as might in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of rash proceedings, if in fervour of zeal they had removed such things. Hooker.

Haply despair hath seiz'd her;

Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown

To her dear'd Poitumus. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

3. Ardour of piety.

There will be at Loretto, in a few ages more, jewels of the greatest value in Europe, if the devotion of its princes continues in its present fervour. Addison on Italy.

FESQUE. n. f. [vesse, Dutch; festa, French.]

A small wire by which those who teach to read point out the letters.

Teach him an alphabet upon his fingers, making the points of his fingers of his left hand both on the inside to signify some letter, when any of them is pointed at by the fore-finger of the right hand, or by any kind of figure. Heldr.

Teach them how many passions ought to move; For such as cannot think, can never love;

And since they needs will judge the poet's art,

Point 'em with figures to each thinning part. Dryd.

FESSELS. n. f. A kind of base grain.

Didstain not fessels or poor vetch to sow,

Or care to make Egyptian lentils thrive. May's Virgil.

FESSE. n. f. [In heraldry.]

The fess is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing the third part of the escutcheon over the middle; if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you Must name the field, and say so many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say barwife, or barry of six, eight, or ten, as the king of Hungary bears argent and gules barry of eight.

Peacocks on Blazoning.

To Fester. v. n. [fesse, in Bavarian, a swelling corrupted, Junius.] To rankle; to corrupt; to grow virulent.

I might, even in my lady's presence, discover the fore which had deeply festered within me.

Sidney.

Inward corruption and infected sin, Not purg'd, not heal'd, behind remained still, And festering fore did rankle yet within. Fairy Qu.

How should our festered sores be cured? Hosker.

I have some wounds upon me, and they smart To hear themselves remember'd.

—Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude, And tent themselves with death. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Mind that their souls

May make a peaceful and a sweet retire From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies

Must lie and fester. Shakespeare's Henry V.

There was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some degree of favour, and Felton, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be festering in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect. Wotton.

Passion and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery that makes it fester. South.

FESTINATE. adj. [festinatus, Latin.] Hasty; hurried. A word not in use.

Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation; we are bound to the like. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. To derive; to draw.

On you, noblest English, Whose blood is fetcht from fathers of war-proof. Shakespeare.

3. To strike at a distance.

The conditions of weapons, and their improvements, are the fetching afar off; for that outruns the danger, as it is seen in ordnance and markets. Bacon's Essays.

4. To bring to any state by some powerful operation.

In smells we see their great and sudden effect in fetching men again, when they swoon. Bacon's Natural History.

At Rome any of those arts immediately thrives, under the encouragement of the prince, and may be fetcht up to its perfection in ten or a dozen years, which is the work of an age or two in other countries. Addison on Italy.

5. To draw within any confinement or prohibition.

General terms may sufficiently convey to the people what our intentions are, and yet not fetch us within the compass of the ordinance. Sanderfon.

6. To produce by some kind of force.

These ways, if there were any secret excellence among them, would fetch it out, and give it fair opportunities to advance itself by. Milton on Education.

An human soul without education is like marble in the quarry, which shews none of its beauties

'till the skill of the polisher fetches out the colours. Addison's Spectator.

7. To perform: It is applied to motion or cause.

I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying The pangs of barr'd affections; though the king Hath charg'd you should not fetch together. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

When evening grey doth rise, I fetch my round Over the mount. Milton.

To come to that place they must fetch a compass three miles on the right hand through a forest. Knolles's History.

8. To perform with suddenness or violence.

Note a wild and wanton herd, Or race of youthful and unhandled colts, Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud. Shakespeare.

The fox fetcht a hundred and a hundred leaps at a delicious cluster of grapes. L'Estrange.

Talk to her of an unfortunate young lady that lost her beauty by the small pox, she fetches a deep sigh. Addison.

9. To reach; to arrive at; to come to.

Mean time flew our ships, and streight we fetcht The fyrens isle; a spleenless wind so stretch Her wings to waft us, and so urg'd our keel. Chapman.

If earth, industrious of herself fetch day Travelling east; and with her part averse From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The hare laid himself down and took a nap; for, says he, I can fetch up the tortoise when I please. L'Estrange.

10. To obtain as its price.

During such a state, silver in the coin will never fetch as much as silver in the bullion. Locke.

To FETCH. v. n. To move with a quick return. Like a shifted wind unto a sail,

It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about. Shakespeare.

FETCH. n. f. [from the verb.] A stratagem by which any thing is indirectly performed; by which one thing seems intended and another is done; a trick; an artifice.

An envious neighbour is easy to find, His cumbersome fetches are seldom behind: His fetch is to flatter, to get what he can; His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee then. Tusser.

It is a fetch of wit; You laying these slight follies on my son, As 'twere a thing a little foil'd i' th' working. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But Sidrophel, as full of tricks As rota men of politicks, Streight cast about to over-reach Th' unwary conqueror with a fetch. Hudib.

With this fetch he laughs at the trick he hath plaid me. Stillingfleet.

The fox had a fetch in't. L'Estrange.

From these instances and fetches Thou mak'st of horses, clocks and watches; Quoth Mat, thou seem'st to mean

That Alma is a mere machine. Prior.

FETCHER. n. f. [from fetch.] One that fetches any thing.

FETID. adj. [fetidus, Latin; fetid, French.] Stinking; rancid; having a smell strong and offensive.

Most putrefactions are of an odious smell; for they smell either fetid or mouldy. Bacon's Natural History.

In the most severe orders of the church of Rome, those who practise abstinence, feel after it fetid hot eruptions. Arbutnot.

Plague, fiercest child of Nemesis divine, Descends from Ethiopia's poison'd woods, From stified Cairo's filth and fetid fields. Thomson's Summer.

FETIDNESS. n. f. [from fetid.] The quality of stinking.

FETLOCK. n. f. [fect and lock.] A tuft of hair that grows behind the pattern joint of many

Vol. I. No. 17. 4 N horses:

FEU

horses : horses of a low size have scarce any such rust. Farrier's Dict.

Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters.

White were the fetlocks of his feet before,
And on his front a snowy star he bore.

FE' TOR. n. f. [fētor, Latin.] A stink; a stench; a strong and offensive smell.

The fētor may discover itself by sweat and humour.

When the symptoms are attended with a fētor of any kind, such a disease will be cured by acceffant substances, and none better than whey.

FE' TTER. n. f. It is commonly used in the plural fēters. [from fēt; petrepe, Saxon.] Chains for the feet; chains by which walking is hindered.

Doctrine unto fools is as fēters on the feet, and like manacles on the right hand.

Drawing after me the chains and fēters wherunto I have been tied, I have by other means errors failed.

Passions too fierce to be in fēters bound,
And nature flies him like enchanted ground.

The wretch in double fēters bound,
Your potent mercy may release.
Pleasure arose in those very parts of his leg that just before had been so much pained by the fēter.

I thought her pride
Had broke your fēters, and assur'd your freedom.

To FE' TTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to enchain; to shackle; to tie. It is properly used of the feet, but is applied to other restraints.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fēter his fickleness.

My confidence! thou art fēter'd
More than my shanks and wrists.

Fēter strong madness in a filken thread;
Charm ach with air, and agony with words.

Doth a master chide his servant because he doth not come, yet knows that the servant is chained and fēter'd, so as he cannot move?

A chain which man to fēter man has made;
By artifice impos'd, by fear obey'd.
To FETTER. v. n. [A cant word from fēl.] To do trifling business; to ply the hands without labour.

When your master is most busy in company, come in and pretend to fettle about the room; and if he chides, say you thought he rung the bell.

FE' TUS. n. f. [fētus, Latin.] Any animal in embryo; any thing yet in the womb; any thing unborn.

That paradox of Hippocrates some learned physicians have of late revived, that the fētus respire in the womb.

FEUD. n. f. [feahd, enmity, Saxon.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would find such mortal feuds
In sharing of their public goods.
In former ages it was a policy of France to raise and cherish intestine feuds and discords in Great Britain.

Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions
Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome.

FEUDAL. adj. [feudalis, low Latin.] Pertaining to fees, feus, or tenures by which lands are held of a superior lord.

FEUDAL. n. f. A dependance; something held by tenure; a fee; a feu.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England.

FEUDATORY. n. f. [from feudal.] One who holds not in chief, but by some conditional tenure from a superior.

The duke of Parma was tempted to be true to that enterprize, by no less promise than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the seignory in chief of the pope, and the protection of Spain.

FE' VER. n. f. [fevere, French; febris, Latin.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.

Think't thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending?

After life's fitful fever he sleeps well.

Should not a ling'ring fever be remov'd,
Because it long has rag'd within my blood?

He had never dreamed in his life, 'till he had the fever he was then newly recovered of.

To FE' VER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a fever.

The white hand of a lady fever thee!
Shake to look on't.

Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap,
She sprung from bed distracted in her mind.

FE' VERET. n. f. [from fever.] A slight fever; febricula.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non-appearance.

FE' VERFEW. n. f. [febris and fuga, Latin.] A plant.

Common feverfew is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England.

FE' VERISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Diseased with a fever.
To other climates beasts and birds retire,
And feverish nature burns in her own fire.

When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow.

2. Tending to fever.
A feverish disorder disabled me.

3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.
We tofs and turn about our feverish will,
When all our ease must come by lying still;
For all the happiness mankind can gain,
Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain.

4. Hot; burning.
And now four days the sun had seen our woes,
Four nights the moon beheld the incessant fire;
It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,
And farther from the feverish North retire.

FE' VERISHNESS. n. f. [from feverish.] A slight disorder of the feverish kind.

FE' VEROUS. adj. [fièvreux se, French; from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever or ague.
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous and did tremble.

2. Having the nature of a fever.
All fev'rous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.
It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain not.

FE' VERT. adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.

O Rome, thy head
Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fev'ry.

FE' UILLAGE. n. f. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.

Of Homer's head I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval.

FE' UILLEMORT. n. f. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to phib.

FE' UTTERER. n. f. A dog-keeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

FEW. adj. [feo, peopa, Saxon; fua, Danish.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.
We are left but few of many.
So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;
So many would be great, so few be good;
For who would virtue for herself regard,
Or wed without the portion of reward?
On Winter seas we fewer storms behold,
Than foul diseases that infect the fold.

Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score.

Party is the madness of many for the gain of a few.

The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.
To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this.

So having said, he thus to Eve in few:
Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done?

Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge.

The firm resolve I here in few disclose.

FE' WEL. n. f. [feu, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire; as firewood, coal.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewels, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions, and broils?

Others may give the fewel on the fire;
But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire.

A known quantity of fuel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it.

To FE' WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.

Never, alas! the dreadful name,
That fewels the infernal flame.

FE' WNESS. n. f. [from few.]

1. Paucity; smallness of number.
These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers with whom they are embodied.

2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.
Fewness: and truth, 'tis thus.

To FEY. v. a. [veeghen, Dutch.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.

Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
That all a dry summer no water will yield,
By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
Commodities many the husbandman reaps.

FIB, v. f. [a cant word among children.] A lie; a falsehood.

Destroy his fib or sophistry is vain,
The creature's at his dirty work again.

Pope's Epistles.

I so often lie,
Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I.

Pope.

To FIB, v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lyes; to speak falsely.

If you have any mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me.

Arbutnot.

FIBBER, n. f. [from fib.] A teller of fibs.

FIBRE, n. f. [fibra, Fr. fibra, Latin.]

1. A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.

New sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew.

Pope.

2. A fibra, in physick, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastic; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries and muscles.

Quincy.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every flacken'd fibra drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life:
The name of father awes me still.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

FIBRIL, n. f. [fibrille, French.] A small fibre or string.

The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells.

Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

FIBROUS, adj. [fibreux, French; from fibra.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture.

Bacon's Natural History.

I saw Petreus' arms employ'd around
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
The trunk was like a sapling in his hands.

Dryd.

The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestine.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

FIBULA, n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle.

Quincy.

FICKLE, adj. [picol, Saxon.]

1. Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; immutable; changeful; without steady adherence.

Remember where we are,
In France amongst a fickle wavering nation.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensiorers of Morpheus' train.
They knew how fickle common lovers are;
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.

Dryden.

We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
Who change the constant lover for the new.

Prior.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.

FIC

He would be loth
Us to abolish; lest the adversary Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
Most favours!

Milton's Paradise Lost.

FICKLENESS, n. f. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom she complained.

Sidney.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
In choice and change of thy dear loved dame.

Fairy Queen.

I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.

Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scene of government to another, since a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences.

Addison's Freeholder.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell,
I found that what she liked one day, she disliked another.

Addison.

FICKLY, adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.

Do not now,

Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
To raise a present pow'r that fickly held
By the frail tenure on the people's will.

Southern.

The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.

The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uzziah and Ezechias. Brown.

Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.

Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single mulberries, single pinks and gilliflowers, which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglafs, which have four leaves. Bacon's Natural History.

Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases. Boyle.

Figures are properly modifications of bodies; for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.

2. Shape; form; semblance.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakespeare.

3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.

The blue German shall the Tigris drink, Ere I, forsaking gratitude and truth, Forget the figure of that godlike youth. Dryden's Virgil.

I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison's Spectator.

A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either. Clarissa.

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.

While fortune favour'd, while his arms support The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court, I made some figure there; nor was my name Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryden's Æneid.

The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison's Spectator.

Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow. Addison's Guardian.

Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.

Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Magnificence; splendour.

If it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that he may live in figure and indulgence, and be able to retire from business to idleness and hurry, his trade to him, loses all its innocency. Law.

6. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

Several statues, which seemed at a distance of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison.

7. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.

In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the sinews of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

My favourite books and pictures tell;

Kindly throw in a little figure, And set the price upon the bigger. Prior.

8. Arrangement; disposition; modification.

The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watts's Logic.

9. A character denoting a number.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number His love to Anthony. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age. Bacon's Essays.

As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South's Sermons.

10. The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.

We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: the works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and daubry beyond our element. Shakespeare.

He set a figure to discover If you were fled to Rye or Dover. Hudibras.

Figure-fingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no fore-sight in what concerns themselves. L'Estrange.

11. [In theology.] Type; representative.

Who was the figure of him that is to come. Romans.

12. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking in which words are distorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are confounded even by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise, Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation, Figures pedantical, these Summer flies Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shakespeare.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to pray. Stillingfleet.

They have been taught rhetoric, but never taught language; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

13. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FIGURE, v. a. [from figuro, Latin.]

1. To form into any determinate shape.

Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Bacon.

Accept this goblet, rough with figured gold. Dryden's Virgil.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance: as in picture or statuary.

Archimæd' how Jove did abuse Europa like a bull, and on his back Her through the sea did bear: so lively seen, That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser.

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high, O'er figured worlds now travels with his eye. Idem.

3. To cover or adorn with figures, or images.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads, My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,

My gay apparel for an almshouse's gown, My figured goblets for a dish of wood. Shakespeare's Richard II.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops, Startle mine eyes, and make me more amaz'd Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shakespeare's King John.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hooker.

There is a history in all mens lives, Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff: Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough

An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the ancients. Dryden.

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison on Medals.

6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear No thought can figure, and no tongue declare. Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshow.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun; In this the heaven figures some event. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Locke.

9. To note by characters.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within, As thro' a crystal glass the figured hours are seen. Dryden.

Quacks, figure-fingers, petti foggers, and republican plotters cannot well live without it. Collier of Confidence.

FIGWORT. n. f. [from fig and wort; ficaria.] A plant.

FILACEOUS. adj. [from filum, Lat.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

They make cables of the bark of lime trees: it is the stalk that maketh the filaceous matter commonly, and sometimes the down that groweth above. Bacon's Natural History.

FILACER. n. f. [from filarius, low Lat. filum.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process.

There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Horris.

FILAMENT. n. f. [from filament, French; filamenta, Lat.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvia passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Brown.

The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey on Consumptions.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray On the next threads and filaments does bear, Which form the springy texture of the air; And

And those still strike the next, 'till to the fight
The quick vibration propagates the light.

Blackmore.

The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

FILBERT. n. f. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or husks, as corrupted from full beard or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruits of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkhoods of all colours.

Bacon's Essays.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!

On what elfe should thy worm of fancy feed?

Yet in a filbert I have often known

Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone.

Dowset.

There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell.

Mortimer.

TO FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen.

Spenser.

The champion robbery by night,
And prowleth and filcheth by day.

Tasso's Husband.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
But makes me poor indeed.

Shakespeare's Othello.

He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drones.

Burton on Melancholy.

What made thee venture to betray,
And filch the lady's heart away.
The pismire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods.

L'Estrange.

Fain would they filch that little food away,
While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey.

Dryden.

So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care.

Gay's Trivia.

FILCHER. n. f. [from filch.] A thief; a petty robber.

FILE. n. f. [from file, Fr. filum, a thread, Latin.]

1. A thread. Not used.
But let me resume the file of my narration, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted.

Watson.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainer, should be cancelled and taken off the file.

Bacon.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those,
and then rank them into several files, according to the subject matters.

Bacon.

Th' apothecary train is wholly blind;
From files a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make.

Dry.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.
Our present musters grow upon the file
To five and twenty thousand men of choice.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The val'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,

That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn

Upon a tawny front.

Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

So saying, on he led his radiant files,
Dazzling the moon.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. [peol, Saxon; wijle, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the uneven-ness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made;
and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made.

Maxon.

A file for the mattocks and for the coulter.

1 Sam. xiii. 21.

The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,
Files in their hands, and hammers at their side.

Dryden.

FILCUTTER. n. f. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Gad-steel is a tough sort of steel: filcutters use it to make their chissels, with which they cut their files.

Maxon.

TO FILE. v. a. [from filum, a thread.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire. Whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports.

Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

2. [from peolan, Saxon.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less.

Hooker.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blemish by filng or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth.

Ray.

3. To smooth; to polish.
His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory,
his tongue filed, and his eye ambitious.

Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.

4. [from filan, Saxon.] To foul; to fully; to pollute. This sense is retained in Scotland.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd.

Shakespeare.

His weeds divinely fashioned,
All fil'd and mangl'd.

Chapman's Iliads.

TO FILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony, 'till we drew up in good order, and filed off.

Tatler.

Did all the grosser atoms at the cell
Of chance file off to form the pondrous ball,
And undetermined into order fall?

Blount's Crea.

FILMOT. n. f. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow-brown colour.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filmot turned up with red.

Swift.

FILER. n. f. [from file.] One who files; one who uses the file in cutting metals.

FILIAL. adj. [filial, French; filius, Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.
My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit.

Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith.

Milton.

He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought.

Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.
And thus the filial godhead answer'd spoke.

Milton.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;
And when the parent root decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds arise.

Prior.

FILIA'TION. n. f. [from filius, Lat.] The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal. Hale's Origin of Man's

FILINGS. n. f. [without a singular; from file.]
Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose.

Brown.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors.

Fulton on the Classics.

TO FILL. v. n. [pyllan, Saxon.]

1. To store 'till no more can be admitted.
Fill the waterpots with water, and they fill'd them up to the brim.

John, ii. 7.

I am who fill
Infinite, not vacuum space.

Milton.

The celestial quires, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld; Birth-day of Heaven and Earth; with joy and shout

The hollow universal orb they fill'd.

Milton.

2. To store abundantly.
Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
And lakes and running streams the waters fill.

Milton.

He with his comforted Eve
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration and deep mufe to hear.

Milton.

Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and superabundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings.

Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.

—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

Shakespeare.

5. TO FILL'OUT. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. TO FILL OUT. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him
Whom pomp and greatness fits so loose about,
That he wants majesty to fill them out.

Dryden.

7. TO FILL UP. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pour the bliss that fills up all the mind.

Pope.

8. TO FILL UP. To supply.
When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the underwork of the nation.

Addison on the War.

9. TO FILL UP. To occupy by bulk.
There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite.

Burnet.

10. TO FILL UP. To engage; to employ.
Is it far you ride?

—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO FILL. v. n.

1. To give to drink.
In the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double.

Rev. xviii.

We fill to th' general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss.

Shakespeare.

2. To grow full.
3. To glut; to satiate.

Things that are sweet and fat are more filling, and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily.

Bacon's Natural History.

4. TO FILL UP. To grow full.
Neither the Palus Meots nor the Euxine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shall-lower.

Woodward.

The

FIL

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization.

Sharp's Surgery.

FILL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.

Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
That aye thereof her babes might suck their fill.

Fairy Queen.

But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,
Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war.

Fairfax.

When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock, and waters flowed out to your fill? 2 Ej. i. 20.

Mean while enjoy

Your fill, what happiness this happy state
Can comprehend, incapable of more.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Amid' the tree now got, where plenty hung
Tempting to nigh, to pluck and eat my fill,

Milton's Paradise Lost.

I spar'd not.
Which made me gently first remove your fears,
That fo you might have room to entertain

Your fill of joy.
Your barbarity may have its fill of destruction.

Pope.

2. [More properly thill.] The place between the shafts of a carriage.

This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber. Mortimer's Husband.

FILLER. n. f. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.

'Tis a meer filler, to stop a vacancy in the hex-ameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil.

Dryden's Æn. Dedic.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable con-ceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They have six diggers to four fillers, so as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer's Husband.

FILLET. n. f. [fillet, French; filum, Latin.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,

And with his circling volumes folds her hairs.

Dryden's Æn.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her wait, a fillet binds her hair.

Pope's Windsor Forest.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:

These morsels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryd. Iliad.

3. Meat rolled together and tied round.

Fillet of fenny snake,

In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakespeare's Mac.

The mixture thus, by chymick art

United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,

Appear'd like one continued species. Swift.

4. [In architecture.] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel. Harris.

Pillars and their fillers of silver.

Exodus.

To FILLET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind with a bandage or fillet.

2. To adorn with an astragal.

He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapters, and filleted them. Ex. xxxviii. 28.

To FILLIP. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the found. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fil up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.] To strike with the nail of the finger by sudden spring or motion.

If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds —
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery fun.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

We see, that if you fillip a lute-string, it sheweth double or treble.

Bacon's Natural History.

FILLIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A jirk of the finger let go from the thumb.

FILLIP. n. f. [filoy, Welsh; filie, French.]

1. A young horse or mare. Not now used.

Geld fillies, but tits, yet a nine days of age,
They die else of gelding, and gelders do rage:
Young fillies so likely of bulk and of bone,
Keep such to be breeders, let gelding alone.

Tusser.

A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unback'd filly may give thee a fall.

Suckling.

2. A young mare: opposed to a colt or young horse.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,
Neighing in likeness of a filly foal.

Shakespeare.

I am jointed in wedlock, for my fins, to one of those fillies who are described in the old poet.

Addison's Spectator.

FILM. n. f. [fýmlepa, Saxon.] A thin pelli-cle or skin.

While the silver needle did work upon the fight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle.

Bacon.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer fight
Had bred.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

A stone is held up by the films of the bladder,
and so kept from grating or offending it.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of fight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies.

Bentley's Sermons.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day.

Pope's Messiah.

To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;

And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly.

Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain.

Philips.

Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glittering textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes.

Pope.

To FILTER. v. a. [filtru, low Latin; perfilum tribere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.

2. To strain; to percolate.

Dilute this liquor with fair water, filtre it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Grew's Mus.

FILTER. n. f. [filtrum, Latin.]

1. A twist of thread; of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel, so that the liquor drips from it.

2. A strainer; a sieve.

That the water passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter.

Ray on the Creation.

FILTHER. n. f. [fulð, Saxon.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

FIL

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile; Filths favour but themselves. Shaksf. King Lear.

Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet:
for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth.

Bacon's Natural History.

How perfect then is man? From head to foot Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandy.

Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and tapence,

To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights.

Tillotson.

FILTHILY. adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.

It stuck filthily in the camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless.

L'Estrange.

FILTHINESS. n. f. [from filthy.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South's Serm.

FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epic poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immortal, low, or filthy in them.

Dryden's Dufrigny.

To FILTER. v. a. [from filtru.] To strain;
to percolate; to filter.

The extract obtained by the former opera ti-burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FILTRATION. n. f. [from filtrate.] A method
by which liquours are procured fine and clear.

The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind.

Quincy.

We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and cogulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible.

Boyle.

FIMBLE Hemp. n. f. [Corrupted from femle.]

The light Summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp.

Mortimer.

Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her
own,

In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, to serve at a need,
The fimble to spin, and the carle for her feed.

Tusser.

FIN. n. f. [fin, Saxon; win, Dutch.] The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.

He that depends Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shaksf. Orbell.

Their fins consist of a number of gristly bones,
long and slender, like pins and needles.

More against Atkeifin.

Thus at half-ebb a rowling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,
Rest on their fins awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way. Dryden.

Still

FIN

Still at his oar th' industrious Libys plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin. Addison's Ovid.
FIN-FOOTED, adj. [fin and foot.] Palmipedous;
having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like fipipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latirostous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet. Brown.

FINABLE, adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine;
that which deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bacon.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he ac-knowledgeed himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. Hayward.

FINAL, adj. [final, French; finalis, Latin.]
1. Ultimate; last.

And over them triumphant death his dart
Shook; but delay'd to strike, though oft invoc'd
With vows, as their chief good, and final hope.

2. Conclusive; decisive.
There be many examples where sea-fights have been final to the war. Bacon.

Henry spent his reign in establishing himself, and had neither leisure nor opportunity to undertake the final conquest of Ireland. Davies on Irel.

3. Mortal; destructive.
At last resolv'd to work his final smart,
He lifted up his hand, but back again did start.

4. Respecting the end or motive.
Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them. Hooker.

By its gravity air raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines: and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuity. Ray.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient.

FINALLY, adv. [from final.]
1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.

Sight bereav'd
May chance to numb'r thee with those Whom patience finally must crown.

2. Completely; without recovery.
Not any house of noble English in Ireland was utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only.

Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no mens fins to answer for but their own.

FINANCE, n. f. [French] Revenue; income; profit. It is seldom used in the singular.

This sort of finance hath been increased. Bacon.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain; as be the ofcheats and forfeitures.

His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their pyracies, though he practised the same trade when he was straitened in his finances at the siege of Byzantium.

FINANCIER, n. f. [French.] One who collects or farms the publick revenue; one who understands the publick revenue.

FINARY, n. f. [from To fine.] In the iron works, the second forge at the iron mills. Diss.

FINCH, n. f. [Finch, Saxon.] A small bird of which we have three kinds, the goldfinch, chaffinch, and bullfinch.

TO FIND, v. a. [findan, Saxon; winden, Dut.]
1. To obtain by searching or seeking.

Ask, and it shall be given to you; seek, and ye shall find. Matthew, vii. 7.

Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all the household stuff?

She disappear'd, and left me dark; I wak'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore
Her loss. Milton.

A bird that flies about,
And beats itself against the cage,
Finding at last no passage out,
It sits and sings. Cowley.

2. To obtain something lost.
When he hath found his sheep, he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing. Luke, xv. 5.

In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other feather; by vent'ring both,
I oft found both. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

3. To obtain something desired.
Thus I embolden'd spake, and freedom used Permissive, and acceptance found. Milton.

Our voluntary service he requires,
Net our necessitated; such with him
Finds no acceptance, nor can find. Milton.

4. To meet with; to fall upon.
There watchful at the gate they find Suspicion with her eyes behind. Dodley's Miscellanies.

In woods and forests thou art found. Cowley.

The bad must miss, the good unfought shall find. Pope.

5. To know by experience.
How oft will he
Of thy chang'd faith complain!
And his fortunes find to be
So airy and so vain! Cowley.

The torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.

6. To come to; to attain.
The sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth; there first receiv'd
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milt.

7. To discover by study, or attention.
The fox that first this cause of grief did find,
'Gan first thus plain his case with words unkind. Hubbard's Tale.

Physicians
With sharpen'd sight some remedies may find. Dryden.

Thy maid! ah, find some nobler theme,
Whereon thy doubts to place. Cowley.

8. To discover what is hidden.
A curse on him who found the oar. Cowley.

9. To hit on by chance; to perceive by accident.
They build on sands, which unmov'd they find,
'Tis but because there was no wind. Cowley.

10. To gain by any mental endeavour.
I by conversing cannot these erect
From prone, nor in their ways complacence find. Milton.

If we for happiness could leisure find,
And wand'ring time into a method bind,
We should not then the great mens favour need. Cowley.

We oft review, each finding like a friend
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

11. To remark; to observe; to perceive.
Thus far to try thee, Adam, I was pleas'd,
And find thee knowing not of beast alone,
Which thou hast rightly nam'd, but of thyself. Milton.

Beauty or wit in all I find. Cowley.

12. To detect; to deprehend; to catch.
When first found in a lie, talk to him of it as a strange monstrous matter, and so shame him out of it. Locke.

13. To reach; to attain.
They are glad when they can find the grave. Job, iii. 22.

They also know,
And reason not contemptibly; with these Find pastime, and bear rule. Milton.

In solitude

What happiness, who can enjoy alone,
Or all enjoying, what contentment find? Milton,
He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,
Yet found them not so large as was his mind. Cowley.

14. To meet.
A clear conscience and heroick mind,
In ill their business and their glory find. Cowley.

15. To settle; to fix any thing in one's own opinion.

Some men
The marks of old and catholick would find. Cowley.

16. To determine by judicial verdict.
They would enforce them to find as they would direct: and if they did not, convent, imprisonment, and fine them. Bacon.

His peers, upon this evidence,
Have found him guilty of high treason. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

17. To supply; to furnish: as, he finds me in money and in victuals.

A war with Spain is like to be lucrative, if we go roundly on at first; the war in continuance will find itself. Bacon.

Still govern thou my song,
Urania, and sit audience find, though few. Milton.

18. [In law.] To approve: as, to find a bill.

19. To determine: as, to find for the plaintiff.

20. To find himself. To be; to fare with regard to ease or pain, health, or sickness.

Pray, sir, how d'ye find yourself? says the doctor. L'Estrange.

21. To find out. To unriddle; to solve.
The finding out of parables is a wearisome labour of the mind. Ecclesiastical, xiii. 26.

22. To find out. To discover something hidden.
Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? Job, ii. 7.

There are agents in nature able to make the particles of bodies stick together by very strong attractions, and it is the business of experimental philosophy to find them out. Newton.

What hinders then, but that you find her out,
And hurry her away by manly force? Addison's Cato.

23. To find out. To obtain the knowledge of.
The principal part of painting is to find out, and thoroughly to understand, what nature has made most beautiful. Dryden.

24. To find out. To invent; to excogitate.
A man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chron, ii. 14.

25. The particle out is added often without any other use than that it adds some force or emphasis to the verb.

While she proudly march'd about,
Greater conquests to find out,
She beat out Susan by the by. Cowley.

It is agreeable to compare the face of a great man with the character, and to try if we can find out in his looks and features either the haughty, cruel, or merciful temper. Addison.

He was afraid of being insulted with Greek;
for which reason he desired a friend to find him out a clergyman rather of plain sense than much learning. Addison's Spectator.

26. To find, is a word of very licentious and capricious use, not easily limited or explained; its first idea is the consequence of search; the second, equally frequent, is mere occasion.

FINDER, n. f. [from find.]
1. One that meets or falls upon any thing.
We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

2. One that picks up any thing lost.
Soms lewd squeaking cryer,
May gall the finder's conscience, if they meet. Dennis.

O yes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer. Craighew.

FIN

FINDFAULT. n. f. [find and fault.] A censurer; a caviller.

We are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouth of all findfaults. Shakespeare.

FINDY. adj. [gefunden, Saxon.] Plump; weighty; firm; solid. Not used. Thus the proverb:

A cold May and a windy,
Makes the barn fat and findy;
means that it stores the barn with plump and firm grain. Junius.

FINE. adj. [finne, French; fin, Dutch and Erse; perhaps from finitus, completed, Latin.]

1. Not coarse.
Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare. Spenser.

He was arrayed in purple and fine linen. Luke.

2. Refined; pure; free from dross.
Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold. Esau.

3. Subtle; thin; tenuous: as, the fine spirits evaporate.

When the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object in the grosser, things shew greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium and the object in the finer. Bacon.

4. Refined; subtly excogitated.
In substance he promised himself money, honour, friends, and peace in the end; but those things were too fine to be fortunate, and succeed in all parts. Bacon.

Whether the scheme has not been pursued so far as to draw it into practice, or whether it be too fine to be capable of it, I will not determine. Temp.

5. Keen; thin; smoothly sharp.

Great affairs are commonly too rough and stubborn to be wrought upon by the finer edges or points of wit. Bacon.

6. Clear; pellucid; transparent: as, the wine is fine.

Let the wine without mixture or stum be all fine.

Or call up the master. Johnson.

7. Nice; exquisite; delicate.

Are they not senseless then, that think the soul nought but a fine perfection of the sense? Davies.

The irons of planes are set fine or rank: they are set fine when they stand so shallow below the sole of the plane, that in working they take off a thin shaving. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

8. Artful; dexterous.

The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, than solid and grounded courses to keep them aloof. Bacon.

9. Fraudulent; sly; knavishly subtle.

Through his fine handling, and his cleanly play, He all those royal signs had stol'n away. Hubbard's Tale.

10. Elegant; beautiful in thought or language.

To call the trumpet by the name of the metal was fine. Dryden.

11. Applied to person, it means beautiful with dignity.

12. Accomplished: elegant of manners.

He was not only the finest gentleman of his time, but one of the finest scholars. Fulton on the Glassicks.

13. Showy; splendid.

It is with a fine genius as with a fine fashion; all those are displeased at it who are not able to follow it. Pope.

The satirical part of mankind will needs believe, that it is not impossible to be very fine and very filthy. Swift.

14. [Ironically.] Something that will serve the purpose; something worth contemptuous notice.

That same knave, Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

They taught us, indeed, to cloath, to dwell in houses,

To feast, to sleep on down, to be profuse:

A fine exchange for liberty. Philips's Britain.

FINE. n. f. [fin, Cimbr.]

1. A mulct; a pecuniary punishment.

The killing of an Irishman was not punished by our law as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an ericke. Davies on Ireland.

2. Penalty.

Ev'n this ill night your breathing shall expire, Paying the fine of rated treach'ry. Shakespeare's King John.

3. Forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty.

The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him: if the devil hath him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, in the way of waste, attempt us again. Shakespeare.

Besides finer set upon plays, games, balls, and feasting, they have many customs, which contribute to their simplicity. Addison.

How vain that second life in others breath,
Th' estate which wits inherit after death!

Ease, health, and life for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Pope.

4. [From finis, Latin: fin, enfin, French.] The end; conclusion. It is seldom used but adverbially, in fin. To conclude; to sum up all; to tell all at once.

In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what it pleased Zelmane, the powers of his spirit depending of her. Sidney.

His resolution, in fine, is, that in the church a number of things are strictly observed, whereof no law of scripture maketh mention one way or other. Hooker.

Still the fine's the crown;

Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. Shakespeare.

Your daughter, ere she seems as won,
Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;

In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Herself most chafely absent. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

The blessings of fortune are the lowest: the next are the bodily advantages of strength and health; but the superlative blessings, in fine, are those of the mind. L'Estrange.

In fine, he wears no limbs about him sound,
With fores and sickneffes beleaguer'd round. Dryden's Juvenal.

In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece. Dryden.

To FINE. v. a. [from fine, the adjective.]

1. To refine; to purify.
The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold. Prov.

There is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold, where they fine it. Job, xxviii. 1.

2. To embellish; to decorate. Now not in use.

Hugh Capet, also, who usurp'd the crown,
To fine his title with some shews of truth,
Convey'd himself as heir to th' lady Lingare. Shakespeare's Henry V.

3. To make less coarse.

It finer the grafs, but makes it short, though thick. Mortimer.

4. To make transparent.

It is good also for fuel, not to omit the shavings of it for the fining of wine. Mortimer's Husbandry.

5. [From the substantive.] To punish with pecuniary penalty.

To fine men one third of their fortune, without any crime committed, seems very hard. Locke.

To FINE. v. n. To pay a fine.

What poet ever fin'd for sheriff? or who
By rhymes and verse did ever lord mayor grow? Oldham.

To FINE DRAW. v. a. [fine and draw.] To sow up a rent with so much nicety that it is not perceived.

FINE DRAWER. n. f. [from finer draw.] One whose business is to sow up rents.

FINE INGERED. adj. [fine and finger.] Nice; artful; exquisite.

The most finer finger'd workman on the ground,
Arachne by his means was vanquished. Spenser.

FIN

FINELY. adv. [from fine.]

1. Beautifully; elegantly; more than justly.

Plutarch says very finely, that a man should not allow himself to hate even his enemies; because if you indulge this passion on some occasions, it will rise of itself in others. Addison.

The walls are painted, and represent the labours of Hercules: many of them look very finely, though a great part of the work has been cracked. Addison on Italy.

2. Keenly; sharply; with a thin edge or point.

Get your black lead, sharpened finely. Peacocks on Drawing.

3. Not coarsely; not meanly; gaily.

He was alone, save that he had two persons of honour, on either hand one, finely attired in white. Bacon's New Atlantis.

4. In small parts; subtly; not grossly.

Saltpetre was but grossly beaten; for it should not be finely powdered. Boyle.

5. [Ironically.] Wretchedly; in such a manner as to deserve contemptuous notice.

Let laws be made to obey, and not to be obeyed, and you will find that kingdom finely governed in a short time. South.

For him she loves:

She nam'd not me; that may be Torrismond,
Whom she has thrice in private seen this day:
Then I am finely caught in my own snare. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

FINE NESS. n. f. [from fine.]

1. Elegance; beauty; delicacy.

Every thing was full of a choice fineness, that, if it wanted any thing in majesty, it supplied with increase in pleasure; and if at the first it struck not admiration, it ravished with delight. Sidney.

As the French language has more fineness and smoothness at this time, so it had more compass, spirit, and force in Montaigne's days. Temple.

The softness of her sex, and the fineness of her genius, conspire to give her a very distinguishing character. Prior.

2. Show; splendour; gaiety of appearance.

The fineness of cloaths destroys the ease: it often helps men to pain, but can never rid them of any: the body may languish under the most splendid covering. Decay of Piety.

3. Subtlety; artfulness; ingenuity.

Those, with the fineness of their souls,
By reason guide his execution. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

4. Purity; freedom from dross and base mixtures.

Our works are, indeed, nought else
But the protractive trials of great Jove,
To find perceptive constancy in men;
The fineness of which metal is not found In fortune's love. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals; as whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height: but when they come to such a fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no farther. Bacon's Natural History.

The ancients were careful to coin their money in due weight and fineness, only in times of exigence they have diminished both the weight and fineness. Abutnot on Coins.

FINERY. n. f. [from fine.] Show; splendour of appearance; gaiety of colours.

Dress up your houses and your images,
And put on all the city's finery,
To consecrate this day a festival. Southey.

The capacities of a lady are sometimes apt to fall short in cultivating cleanliness and finery together. Swift.

Don't chafe your place of study by the finery of the prospects, or the most various scenes of sensible things. Watts.

They want to grow rich in their trades, and to maintain their families in some such figure and degree of finery, as a reasonable Christian life has no occasion for. Law.

FINE SSE. n. f. [French.] Artifice; stratagem: an unnecessary word which is creeping into the language. A cir-

FIN

A circumstance not much to be stood upon, in case it were not upon some finess. Hayward.

FINER. n. f. [from finis.] One who purifies metals.

Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer. Pro. xxv. 4.
FINGER. n. f. [finger, Saxon; from fingen, to hold.]

1. The flexible member of the hand by which men catch and hold.

The fingers and thumb in each hand consist of fifteen bones, there being three to each finger. Quincy.

You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying Upon her skinny lips. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Diogenes, who is never said,
For aught that ever I could read,
To whine, put finger i' th' eye, and sob,
Because he had ne'er another tub. Hadibras.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forward, and one opposite to them bending backwards, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally or united; whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity. Ray.

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes of the world, and making every one found a particular note. Keil against Burnet.

Poor Peg sewed, spun, and knit for a livelihood, 'till her fingers ends were fore.

2. A small measure of extension; the breadth of a finger.

Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,
Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;
Or seven at most, when thickest is the board. Dryden's Juvenal.

One of these bows with a little arrow did pierce through a piece of steel three fingers thick. Wilkins's Mathematical Mag.

3. The hand; the instrument of work; manufacture; art.

Fool, that forgets her stubborn look,
This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

TO FINGER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To touch lightly; to toy with.

Go, get you gone, and let the papers lie;

You would be fingering them to anger me. Shakespeare.

One that is covetous is not so highly pleased with the meer sight and fingering of money, as with the thoughts of his being considered as a wealthy man. Grew's Cosmol Sac.

2. To touch unseasonably or thievishly.

His ambition would needs be fingering the sceptre, and hoisting him into his father's throne. South's Sermons.

3. To touch an instrument of music.

She hath broke the lute;

I did but tell her the mistook her frets,

And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering. Shakespeare.

4. To perform any work exquisitely with the fingers.

Nor any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
Wit this so curious net-work might compare. Spenser.

FINGERFERN. n. f. [finger and fern; asplenium, Latin.] A plant.

FINGER-STONE. n. f. [finger and stone; telesites, Latin.] A fossil resembling an arrow.

FINGLEFANGLE. n. f. [from fangle.] A trifle; a burlesque word.

We agree in nothing but to wrangle,
About the slightest finglefangle. Hadibras.

FINICAL. adj. [from fine.] Nice; foppish; pretending to superfluous elegance.

A whorson, glassglazing, superfluous, finical rogue. Shakespeare's King Lear.

I cannot bear a finical fop romancing, how the king took him aside at such a time; what the queen said to him at another. L'Estrange.

FINICALLY. adv. [from finical.] Foppishly.

FINICALNESS. n. f. [from finical.] Superfluous nicety; foppery.

FIN

TO FINISH. v. a. [finir, French; finis, Lat.]

1. To bring to the end proposed; to complete.

For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it? Luke, xiv. 28.

As he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace. 2 Corinth. viii. 6.

2. To make perfect.

A poet uses episodes; but episodes, taken separately, finish nothing. Broome on the Odyssey.

3. To perfect; to polish to the excellency intended.

Though here you all perfection should not find,

Yet is it all th' Eternal will design'd;

It is a finish'd work, and perfect in his kind. Blackmore.

I would make what bears your name as finished as my last work ought to be; that is, more finished than the rest. Pope.

4. To end; to put an end to.

FINISHER. n. f. [from finish.]

1. Performer; accomplisher.

He that of greatest works is finisher,

Of does them by the weakest minister. Shakespeare.

2. One that puts an end; ender.

This was the condition of those times; the world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it;

half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail;

the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocency, the other a finisher of all his troubles. Hooker.

3. One that completes or perfects.

The author and finisher of our faith. Hebrews.

O prophet of glad tidings! finisher

Of utmost hope! Milton's Par. Lost.

FINITE. adj. [finitus, Latin.] Limited; bounded; terminated.

Servius conceives no more than a finite number for indefinite. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinite. Locke.

That supposed infinite duration will, by the very supposition, be limited at two extremes, though never so remote asunder, and consequently must needs be finite. Bentley.

FINITELESS. adj. [from finite.] Without bounds; unlimited.

It is ridiculous unto reason, and finiteless as their desires. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FINITELY. adv. [from finite.] Within certain limits; to a certain degree.

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finitely distant from us. Stillington.

FINITENESS. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

I ought now to unbay the current of my passion, and love without other boundary than what is set by the finiteness of my natural powers. Norris.

FINITUDE. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries. This is hardly an authorized word.

Finitude, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degrees of affections, or properties of these things to one another; infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections or properties. Cheyne.

FINLESS. adj. [from fin.] Wanting fins.

He angers me

With telling of the moldwarp and the ant.

And of a dragon and a finless fish. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.

FINLIKE. adj. [fin and like.] Formed in imitation of fins.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern

And untought Indian on the stream did glide;

Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,

Or finlike oars did spread from either side, Dryden's Anna Mirabilis.

FINNED. adj. [from fin.] Having broad edges spread out on either side.

They plow up the turf with a broad finned plough. Mortimer.

FIR

FINNY. adj. [from fin.] Furnished with fins; formed for the element of water.

High o'er the main in wat'ry pomp he rides,

His azure car and finny couriers guides;

Proteus his name. Dryden's Virgil.

New herds of beasts he sends the plains to share;

New colonies of birds to people air;

And to their oozy beds the finny fish repair. Dryden's Ovid.

While black with storms the ruffled ocean rolls,

And from the fisher's art defends her finny shoals. Blackmore.

With hairy springes we the birds betray;

Slight lines of hair surprize the finny prey. Pope.

FINTOED. adj. [fin and toe.] Palmipedous; having a membrane between the toes.

Such creatures as are whole footed, or fintoed, viz. some birds and quadrupeds, are naturally directed to go into the water and swim there. Ray on the Creation.

FINOCHIO. n. f. A species of fennel. A plant.

FIPPLE. n. f. [from fibula, Latin.] A stopper.

You must know, that in recorders, which go with a gentle breath, the concave of the pipe, were it not for the fipple that straiteneth the air, much more than the simple concave, would yield no sound. Bacon's Natural History.

FIR. n. f. [fyr, Welch; fuph, Saxon; fyr, Danish.] The tree of which deal-boards are made.

It is evergreen: the leaves are single, and for the most produced on every side of the branches:

the male flowers, or catkins, are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are propagated on cones, which are squamose. Miller.

He covered the floor of the house with planks of fir. 1 Kings.

The spiring fir and stately box. Pope.

FIRE. n. f. [fyr, Saxon; fewer, German.]

1. The igneous element.

The force of fire ascended first on high,

And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky;

Then air succeeds, in lightness next to fire. Dryden.

2. Anything burning.

A little fire is quickly trodden out,

Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Where two raging fires meet together,

They do consume the thing that feeds their fury. Shakespeare.

So contraries on Aetna's top conspire;

Here hoary frosts, and by them breaks out fire. Cowley.

3. A conflagration of towns or countries.

There is another liberality to the citizens, who had suffered damage by a great fire. Arbutnot on Coins.

Though safe thou think'st thy treasure lies,

Conceal'd in chests from human eyes,

A fire may come, and it may be

Bury'd, my friend, as far from thee. Granville.

4. Flame; light; lustre.

Stars, hide your fires!

Let not night see my black and deep desires! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Torture by burning.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire,

To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire? Prior.

6. The punishment of the damned.

Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? Isaiah xxxiii.

7. Anything provoking; any thing that inflames the passions.

What fire is in my ears? Can this be true?

Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much? Shakespeare.

8. Ardour of temper; violence of passion.

He had fire in his temper, and a German blunt ness; and, upon provocations, might strain a phrase. Atterbury.

9. Liveliness of imagination; vigour of fancy; intellectual activity; force of expression; spirit of sentiment.

FIR

Nor can the snow that age does shed
Upon thy rev'rend head,
Quench or allay the noble fire within,
But all that youth can be thou art. Coriol.
They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words, and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is good oratory and poetry to them. Felton on the Classics.
He brings, to make us from our ground retire,
The reasoner's weapons and the poet's fire.

Exact Racine, and Corneille's noble fire, Taught us that France had something to admire. Blackmore.

The bold Longinus all the nine inspire,
And warm the critick with a poet's fire. Pope.
Oh may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire. Pope.
10. The passion of love.

Love various hearts does variously inspire,
It stirs in gentle bosoms gentle fire,
Like that of incense on the altar laid;
But raging flames tempestuous souls invade;
A fire which every windy passion blows,
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

The fire of love in youthful blood,
Like what is kindled in bruh-wood,
But for a moment burns. Shadwell.

The god of love retires;
Dim are his torches, and extinct his fires. Pope.
New charms shall still increase desire,
And time's swift wing shall fan the fire.

11. Eruption or imposthumation: as, St. Anthony's fire.

12. To set FIRE on, or set on FIRE. To kindle; to inflame.

Hermofilla courageously set upon the horsemen, and set fire also upon the stables where the Turks horses stood. Knolles.

He that set a fire on a plane-tree to spite his neighbour, and the plane-tree set fire on his neighbour's house, is bound to pay all the loss, because it did all rise from his own ill intention. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

13. To set a FIRE. To inflame.
So inflam'd by my desire,

It may set her heart a-fire. Carow.

FIREARMS. n. f. [fire and arms.] Arms which owe their efficacy to fire; guns.

Ammunition to supply their few firearms. Clarendon.

Before the use of firearms there was infinitely more scope for personal valour than in the modern battles. Pope.

FIREBALL. n. f. [fire and ball.] Grenado; ball filled with combustibles, and bursting where it is thrown.

Judge of those insolent boasts of conscience, which, like so many fireballs, or mouth grenadoes, are thrown at our church. South's Sermons.

The same great man hath sworn to make us swallow his coin in fireballs. Swift.

FIREBRUSH. n. f. [fire and brush.] The brush which hangs by the fire to sweep the hearth.

When you are ordered to stir up the fire, clean away the ashes from betwixt the bars with the firebrush. Swift.

FIREBRAKE. n. f. [fire and drake.] A fiery serpent; I suppose the prester.

By the hissing of the snake,
The rustling of the firebrake,
I charge thee thou this place forfake,

Nor of queen Mab be prattling. Drayton's Nymphid.

FIRENEW. adj. [fire and new.] New from the forge; new from the melting-house.

Arnado is a most illustrious wight,
A man of firenew words, fashion's own knight.

Pour of it upon a firepan well heated, as they do rose-water and vinegar. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FIRER. n. f. [from fire.] An incendiary.

Others burned Mouffel, and the rest marched as a guard for defence of these firers. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

FIRRESIDE. n. f. [fire and side.] The hearth;
the chimney.

My judgment is, that they ought all to be despised, and ought to serve but for Winter talk by the fireside. Bacon.

Love no more is made
By the fireside, but in the cooler shade. Carew.

By his fireside he starts the hare,
And turns her in his wicker chair. Prior.

What art thou asking of them, after all? Only to sit quietly at thy own fireside. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

FIRESTICK. n. f. [fire and stick.] A lighted stick or brand.

Children, when they play with firesticks, move and whirl them round so fast, that the motion will cozen their eyes, and represent an intire circle of fire to them. Digby on Bodies.

FIREWORK. n. f. [fire and work.] Shows of fire; pyrotechnical performances.

The king would have me present the princeps with some delightful ostentation, or pageant, or antick, or fireworks. Shakespeare.

We represent also ordnance, and new mixtures of gunpowder, wildfires burning in water and unquestionable; and also fireworks of all variety.

The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of meteors, by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks. Brown.

In fireworks give him leave to vent his spite;
Those are the only serpents he can write. Dryden.

Our companion proposed a subject for a firework, which he thought would be very amusing.

Their fireworks are made up in paper. Tatler.

To FIRE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set on fire; to kindle.

They spoiled many parts of the city, and fired the houses of those whom they esteemed not to be their friends; but the rage of the fire was at first hindered, and then appeased by the fall of a sudden shower of rain. Hayward.

The breathless body, thus bewail'd, they lay,
And fire the pile. Dryden.

A second Paris, differing but in name,
Shall fire his country with a second flame.

2. To inflame the passions; to animate.

Yet, if desire of fame, and thirst of pow'r,
A beauteous princeps, with a crown in dow'r,
So fire your mind, in arms assert your right. Dryden.

of fire; as tongs, fireshovel, prongs, and irons.

The neighbours are coming out with forks and fireshovels, and spits, and other domestick weapons.

Dryden's Spanish Fryer.

FIRESTONE. n. f. [fire and stone.]

The firestone, or pyrites, is a compound metallick fossil, composed of vitriol, sulphur, and an unmetallick earth; but in very different proportions in the several masses. The most common sort, which is used in medicine, is a greenish shapeless kind found in our clay-pits, out of which the green vitriol or copperas is procured. It has its name of pyrites, or firestone, from its giving fire on being struck against a steel much more freely than a flint will do; and all the sparks burn a longer time, and grow larger as they fall, the inflammable matter struck from off the stone burning itself out before the spark becomes extinguished.

Firestone, if broke small, and laid on the cold lands, must be of advantage. Mort. Husbandry.

FIREWOOD. n. f. [fire and wood.] Wood to

By Bridewell all descend, As morning pray'r and flagillation end.

FLAGGINES, n. f. [from flaggy.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension.

FLAGGY, adj. [from flaggy.]

1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings, when forth he did display, Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-stem upon the stock of a colewort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple.

FLAGITIOUS, adj. [from flagitius, Lat.]

1. Wicked; villainous; atrocious.

No villainy or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found, that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it.

There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline. L'Estrange.

First, those flagitious times,
Pregnant with unknown crimes,
Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Roscommon.
Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Addison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times. Pope.
2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, sad outcast of each church and state
And, harder still, flagitious yet not great. Pope.
FLAGITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from flagitious.] Wickedness; villainy.

FLAGON. n. f. [flaccid, Welsh; flaxe, Saxon; flaske, Danish; flacon, French; flasco, Italian; flasco, Spanish.] A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
More had sent him by a suitor in Chancery two silver flagons. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Did they coin pispots, bowls, and flagons
Int' officers of horse and dragoons? Hudibras.
His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,
Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use. Roscommon.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think
They either change or stint him in his drink. Dryden's Juvenal.

FLAGRANCY. n. f. [flagrantia, Latin.] Burning; heat; fire.

Lust causeth a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FLAGRANT. adj. [flagrans, Latin.]
1. Ardent; burning; eager. It is always used figuratively.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker.

2. Glowing; flushed.
See Sappho, at her toilet's greasy task,
Then issuing flagrant to an evening mask:
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blown in the setting sun. Pope.
3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming into notice.
When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation. Swift.

With equal poize let stedly justice sway,
And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;
But, 'till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay. Smith.

FLAGRATION. n. f. [flagro, Latin.] Burning.

FLAGSTAFF. n. f. [flag and staff.] The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,
On wings of all the winds to combat flies:
His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,
And bloody crosses on his flagstaff's rise. Dryden's Anna Mirabilis.

FLAIL. n. f. [flagellum, Latin; flégel, German.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear: the tool of the threshing.

Our soldiers, like the night owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy threshing with a flail,
Fell gently down as if they struck their friends. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail bath thresh'd the corn,
That ten day-labourers could not end. Milton.

In this pile shall reign a mighty prince,
Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense. Dryden.

The dextrous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms and government. Lodge.

The threshing, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;
The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.

FLAKE. n. f. [flocus, Latin.]
1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles, like red flakes in the element,
When the weather is hottest. Sidney.

And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almost made appear'd. Fairy Queen.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burnt.

Small drops of a misting rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow. Grew's Cosmology.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison on Italy.

2. A stratum; layer; film; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,
As not to be divorced by a wound. Sandys.
The teeth cut away great flakes of the metal, 'till it received the perfect form the teeth would make. Moxon.

TO FLAKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,
Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow. Pope's Odyssey.

TO FLAKE. v. n. To break into laminae; to part in loose bodies.

FLAKY. adj. [from flake.]
1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the East. Shakespeare's Richard III.

The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire. Pope.

Hence, whence the snows in Winter cease to weep,
And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,
The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in Summer, and those banks disdain. Blackmore.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminae.

FLAM. n. f. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lye; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old arupicy and aug'ry. Hudibras.

'Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion. South.

What are most of the histories of the world but lyes? Lyes immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South.

TO FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lye. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was so flam'd,
To damn ourselves 't' avoid being damn'd. Hudibras.

God is not to be flam'd off with lyes, who knows exactly what thou can'st do, and what not. South.

FLAMBEAUX. n. f. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seized a flambeaux with zeal to destroy. Dryden.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeaux in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. Addison's Guardian.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme, Fr.]

1. Light emitted from fire.
Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, so hot as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame. Newton's Opticks.

What flame, what lightning e'er
So quick an active force did bear! Cowley.

2. Fire.
Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now. Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:
In both our English genius is express'd,
Lofty and bold, but negligently dress'd. Waller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame. Pope.

5. Passion of love.
My heart's on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire. Cowley.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love. Cowley.

No warning of th' approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came:
I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

TO FLAME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shakespeare.

He fell flaming through the ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition. Milton.

Hell all around
As one great furnace flam'd. Milton.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing fable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECOLOURED. adj. [flame and colour.] Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flame-coloured stockings. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce and cholerick aspect, in a flame-coloured garment. Peacocks.

FLAMEN. n. f. [Latin.] A priest; one that officiates in solemn offices.

Then first the flamen tasted living food;
Next his grim idol smear'd with human blood. Pope.

FLAMMABILITY. n. f. [flamma, Latin.] The quality of admitting to be set on fire, so as to blaze.

In the sulphur of bodies torried, that is, the oily, fat and unctuous parts, consist the principles of flammability. Brown.

FLAMMATION. n. f. [flammatio, Latin.] The act of setting on flame.

White or crystalline arsenick, being artificial, and sublimed with salt, will not endure flammation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FLAMMEOUS. adj. [flammeus, Latin.] Consisting of flame; resembling flame.

This flammeous light is not over all the body. Brown.

FLAMMIFEROUS. adj. [flammifer, Lat.] Bringing flame.

FLAMMIVOMOUS. adj. [flamma, and vomo, Lat.] Vomiting out flame. DiG.

FLAMY. adj. [from flame.]
1. Inflamed; burning; blazing.

My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes,
With flamy breaths do issue oft in found. Sidney.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will. Bacon's Natural History.

FLANK. n. f. [flanc, French, according to Vol. I. N^o. 18. 4 P Manège.

FLA

Menage, from menage: more probably from latus, Latin.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He laid, and pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent:

Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,

His corset pierces, and his garment rends,

And glancing downward near his flank descends.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from the rampier in front, and from the galleys that lay at sea in flank.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such sort as he might take the flank of the enemy.

To right and left the front

Divided, and to either flank retir'd.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain.

To FLANK. v. a.

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side.

With fates averse against their king's command,

Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,

And flank the passage.

3. To secure on the side.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,

Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay.

FLANKER. n. f. [from flank.] A fortification putting out so as to command the side of a body

Marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and fore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire.

Like storms of hail the stones fell down from high,

Cast from the bulwarks, flankers, ports, and towers.

To FLANKER. v. a. [flanker, French.] To descend by lateral fortifications.

FLANNEL. n. f. [gwlann, Welsh; from gwlan, wool, Davies.] A soft nappy stuff of wool.

I cannot answer the Welch flannel.

FLAP. n. f. [keppe, Saxon.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal

by turning down the flaps.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. [A disease in horses.]

When a horse has the flaps, you may perceive his lips swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg: cut some flaves with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure.

To FLAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle: the eagle flap'd off the former, and devoured the other.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,

This painted child of dirt, that stinks and tingles.

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

With fruitless toil

Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate

Their feet in liquid shackles bound.

Three times, all in the dead of night,

A bell was heard to ring;

And shrieking at her window thrice

The raven flap'd his wing.

FLA

To FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young.

The dire flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel.

2. To fall with flaps, or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn,

Let thy worst wig, long us'd to storms, be worn;

This knows the powder'd footman, and with care

Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair.

FLAPDRAGON. n. f. [from a dragon supposed to breathe fire.]

1. A play in which they catch raisins out of burning brandy, and, extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them.

2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.

He plays at quoits well, and eats conger and fennel, and drinks candles ends for flapdragons, and rides the wild mare with the boys.

To FLAPDRAGON. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow; to devour.

But to make an end of the ship, to see how the sea flapdragoned it.

FLAPPEARED. adj. [flap and ear.] Having loose and broad ears.

A whorson, beetleheaded, flapped ear knave.

To FLAKE. v. a. [from sledoren, to flutter,

Dutch, Skinner; perhaps accidentally changed from glace.]

1. To glitter with transient lustre.

Doctrine and life, colours and light, in one

When they combine and mingle, bring

A strong regard and awe; but speech alone

Doth vanish like a flaring thing,

And in the ear, not conscience, ring.

2. To glitter offensively.

When the sun begins to sting

His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring

To arched walks of twilight groves.

3. To be in too much light.

I cannot stay

Flaring in sunshine all the day.

4. To flutter with a splendid show.

She shall be loose enrob'd,

With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head.

FLASH. n. f. [ϕλῆξ, Minshew.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.

When the cross blue lightning seem'd to open

The breast of heav'n, I did present myself

Ev'n in the aim and very flash of it.

We see the flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard.

One with a flash begins, and ends in smok;

The other out of smok brings glorious light.

And as Ægeon, when with heaven he strove,

Defy'd the fork lightning from afar,

At fifty mouths his flaming breath expires,

And flash for flash returns, and fires for fires.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.

Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar?

Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for a while suspend reflection, and hide the sinner from himself, to such discourses as awaken conscience.

3. A short transient state.

The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash.

4. A body of water driven by violence.

To FLASH. v. n.

1. To glitter with a quick and transient flame.

This salt powdered, and put into a crucible, was,

by the injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash divers times almost like melted nitre.

2. To burst out into any kind of violence.

By day and night he wrongs me; ev'ry hour

He flashes into one gross crime or other,

That sets us all at odds.

3. To break out into wit, merriment, or bright thought.

They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought.

To FLASH. v. a. To strike up large bodies of water from the surface.

With his raging arms he rudely flash'd

The waves about, and all his armour swept,

That all the blood and filth away was wash'd.

If the sea-water be flash'd with a stick or oar,

the same casteth a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire.

FLASHER. n. f. [from flash.] A man of more appearance of wit than reality.

FLASHILY. adv. [from flashy.] With empty show; without real power of wit, or solidity of thought.

FLASHY. adj. [from flash.]

1. Empty; not solid; showy without substance.

Flashy wits cannot fathom the whole extent of a large discourse.

When they lift, their lean and flashy tongues

Grate on their scannel pipes of wretched straw.

This mean conceit, this darling mystery,

Which thou think'st nothing, friend! thou shalt not buy;

Nor will I change for all thy flashy wit.

2. [From flaccidus, Skinner.] Infipid; without force or spirit.

Distilled books are, like common distilled waters, flashy things.

The tastes that most offend in fruits, herbs and roots, are bitter, harsh, sour, waterish or flashy.

FLASH. n. f. [flasque, French.]

1. A bottle; a vessel.

Then for the Bourdeaux you may freely ask;

But the Champagne is to each man his flask.

2. A powder-horn.

Powder in a skilless soldier's flask

Is set on fire.

FLASKET. n. f. [from flask.] A vessel in which vians are served.

Another plac'd

The silver stands, with golden flasks grac'd.

FLAT. adj. [plat, French.]

1. Horizontally level without inclination.

Thou, all-shaking thunder,

Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world.

Virtue could see to do what virtue would

By her own radiant light, though fun and moon

Were in the flat sea funk.

The houses are flat roofed to walk upon, so that every bomb that fell on them would take effect.

2. Smooth; without protuberances.

In the dawning of the next day we might plainly discern it was a land flat to our fight, and full of hofsage.

3. Not elevated; fallen; not erect.

Cease t' admire, and beauty's plumes

Fall flat, and shrink into a trivial toy,

At every sudden flighting quite abasht.

4. Level with the ground.

In them is plainest taught, and easiest learnt,

What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so,

What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat.

That Christ-church stands above ground, and that the church of Westminster lies not flat upon it, is your lordship's commendation.

5. Lying prostrate; lying along.

The wood-born people fall before her flat,

And worship her as goddess of the wood.

That lamentable wound,

Which laid that wretched prince flat on the ground.

6. [In painting.] Wanting relief; wanting prominence of the figures.

7. Tasteless; insipid; dead.
He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece.
Shakespeare's Troil. and Cref.
Taste so divine! that what of sweet before Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this and harsh.
Milton.

The miry fields,
Rejoicing in rich mold, most ample fruit
Of beauteous form produce; pleasing to sight,
But to the tongue inelegant and flat.
Phillips.
8. Dull; unanimated; frigid.
Short speeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intention; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted,
Bacon.

Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dry. Don Seb.
9. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.
I feel my genial spirits droop,
My hopes all flat, nature within me seems
In all her functions weary of herself. Milt. Agonistes.
10. Unpleasing; tasteless.
How weary, stale, flat and unprofitable
Seems to me all the uses of this world!

Shakespeare's Hamlet.
To one firmly persuaded of the reality of heavenly happiness, and earnestly desirous of obtaining it, all earthly satisfactions must needs look little, and grow flat and unfavourable. Atterb. Sermons.
11. Peremptory; absolute; downright.

His horse with flat tiring taught him, that direct it stays make speedy journeys. Sydney.
It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punishes nothing but the evil act or wicked word. Spenser's State of Ireland.
As it is the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licenti-ousness. Spenser.

You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes;
Those prisoners you shall keep:
—I will, that's flat. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Thus repuls'd, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us. Milton's Paradise Lost.
If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Fratily gets pardon by submissiveness:
But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story:
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his meer clod of earth, the spacious sky.
Herbert.

You had broke and robb'd his house,
And stole his talismanique louse;
And all his new-found old inventions,
With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras.
12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.
If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle.

Bacon's Natural History.
The upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp.
Ray on the Creation.

FLAT. n. f.
1. A level; an extended plane.
The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon.

Because the air receiveth great tincture from earth, expose flesh or fish both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear. Wotton's Architecture.

He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished a kind of luxury for a hermit. Add. on It.

2. Even ground; not mountainous.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
'Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'er top old Pelion, or the icy head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The way is ready and not long,
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Fast by a mountain. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. A smooth low ground exposed to mundations.

The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head, O'erbears your officers. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

All the infectious, that the fun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall.
Shakespeare's Tempest.

Half my pow'r's this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln wathes have devoured them.
Shakespeare's King John.

4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.
I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shakef.

The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh's Essays.
Having newly left these grammatick flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, they are now turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy.
Milton on Education.

Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tide: skim o'er the cover'd land,
And feamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryd.

Must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.
5. The broad side of a blade.
A darted mandate came
From that great will which moves this mighty frame,
Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the dæmons of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that stay behind. Dry.

6. Depression of thought and language.
Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.

7. Surface without relief, or prominences.
Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills. Bent. Ser.

TO FLAT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.

The ancients say, if you take two twigs of feveral fruit trees, and flat them on the sides, and bind them close, and set them in the ground, they will come up in one stock. Bacon.

With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,
Distends their swelling lips, and flats their nose.
Greob.

2. To make vapid.
An orange, lemon and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four foot deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juice somewhat flatted. Bacon's Natural History.

TO FLAT. v. n.
1. To grow flat: opposed to swell.
I burnt it the second time, and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more that at first. Temple.

2. To render unanimated or evanid.
Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

FLATLONG. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downwards; not edgewise.

What a blow was there given?
—An it had fallen flatlong. Shakespeare's Tempest.
FLATLY. adv. [from flat.]

1. Horizontally; without inclination.

Oh, that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery! Shakef. Winter's Tale.

5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.

How fast does obscurity, flatness, and impertinency flow in upon our meditations? 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.

6. Dulness; insipidity; frigidity.
Some of Homer's translators have swelled into fustian, and others sunk into flatness.

Pope's Preface to Homer.
7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.

Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pale of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon's Natural History.

or instrument by which bodies are flattened.

TO FLATTER. v. a. [flatter, French.]
1. To flatter with praises; to please with blandishments; to gratify with servile obsequious-ness; to gain by false compliments.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for's power to thunder: his heart's his mouth;

What his breast forges that his tongue must vent.
Shakespeare.

He that flattereth his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet. Proverbs, xxix. 5.

He flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful. Psalms, xxxvi. 2.

FLEE'CED, adj. [from fleece.] Having fleeces of wool.

As when two rams, stirr'd with ambitious pride,

Fight for the rule of the rich fleece'd flock,

Their horned fronts so fierce on either side

Do meet, that with the terror of the shock

Astonish'd both stand senseless as a block.

FLEE'CY, adj. [from fleece.] Woolly; covered with wool.

Not all the fleece wealth

That doth enrich these downs is worth a thought

To that my errand.

From eastern point

Of Libra, to the fleece star, that bears

Andromeda far off Atlantic seas.

Let her glad vallies smile with waving corn;

Let fleece flocks her rising hills adorn.

The good shepherd tends his fleece care,

Seeks his freshest pasture, and the purest air;

Explores the loft, the wand'ring sheep directs.

To FLEER, v. n. [pleaprian, to trifle, Saxon; fleardan, Scottish. Skinner thinks it formed from leer.]

1. To mock; to gibe; to jest with insolence and contempt.

You speak to Casca, and to such a man

That is no fleering tell-tale.

FLEXIBLENES. n. f. [from flexible.]

1. Possibility to be bent; not brittleness; easiness to be bent; not stiffness; pliancy; pliancy. I will rather chuse to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embaced flexibleness shall be forced to bend. King Charles.

Keep those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibleness and weight, would flag or curl. Royal's Spring of the Air.

2. Facility; obsequiousness; compliance.

3. Ductility; manageableness.

The flexibleness of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable. Locke.

FLEXIBLE. adj. [from flexilis, Latin.] Pliant; easily bent; obsequious to any power or impulse.

Every flexible wave
Obeys the blast, th' aerial tumult swells. Thomson's Summer.

FLEXION. n. f. [from flexio, Latin.]

1. The act of bending.

2. A double; a bending; part bent; joint.

Of a sinuous pipe that may have some four flexions, trial would be made. Bacon's Natural History.

3. A turn towards any part or quarter.

Pity causeth sometimes tears, and a flexion or cast of the eye aside. Bacon's Natural History.

FLEXOR. n. f. [Latin.] The general name of the muscles which act in contracting the joints.

Flatterers, who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back. Arbutnot.

FLEXUOUS. adj. [from flexuosus, Latin.]

1. Winding; full of turns and meanders; tortuous.

In regard of the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow crannies, and the restrained flexuous rivulets of corporeal things, are all contemptible. Digby on the Soul.

2. Bending; not strait; variable; not steady.

The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we did not feel; and the flexuous burning of flames doth shew the air beginneth to be unquiet. Bacon's Natural History.

FLEXURE. n. f. [from flexura, Latin.]

1. The form or direction in which any thing is bent.

Contrary is the flexure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joint of their hind legs bends backward. Ray.

2. The act of bending.

The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy; His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

3. The part bent; the joint.

His mighty strength lies in his able loins, And where the flexure of his navel joins. Sandys.

4. Obsequious or servile cringe. Not used.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out With titles blown from adulation? Will it give place to flexure and low bends? Shakespeare's Henry V.

To FLICKER. v. a. [from flickeren, Dutch; plieccian, Saxon.] To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.

The wreath of radiant fire,
On flickering Phœbus' front. Shakespeare's King Lear.

'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,
And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the fun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flick'ring on her nest made short essays to sing. Dryden.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;

Then flickering to his pallid lips, she strove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love. Dryden.

FLIER. n. f. [from fly.]

1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.

The gates are ope, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Now the fliers from and forakers of their places,
Carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.

2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest; as in a jack.

The flier, tho't had leaden feet,
Turn'd so quick you scarce could see't. Swift.

FLIGHT. n. f. [from To fly.]

1. The act of flying or running from danger.

And now, too late, he wishes for the fight,
That strength he wasted in ignoble flight. Denham.

He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,
And claims the prize because he best did run. Dryden's Indian Emperor.

As eager of the chace, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan saw and lov'd, and, burning with desire,

2. The act of using wings; volation.

For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
That from this lower tract he dar'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spens. Muio.

The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Latic palace took her flight. Dryd. Æn.

Winds that tempests brew,
When through Arabian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spite. Dryden.

3. Removal from place to place by means of wings.

Ere the bat hath flown
His cloyster'd flight. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The fowls shall take their flight away together. 2 Efd. v. 6.

Fowls, by Winter forc'd, forsake the floods,
And wing their hasty flight to happier lands. Dryden's Æn.

4. A flock of birds flying together.

Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

They take great pride in the feathers of birds, and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited into it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon's New Atlantis.

I can at will, doubt not,
Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, on my cup t'attend. Milton.

5. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flight of pigeons.

6. A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.

At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full threescore Scots they slew. Cherry Chase.

Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Swift.

7. The space past by flying.

8. Heat of imagination; fallacy of the soul.

Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,
When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.

He shewed all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was because he attempted every thing. Pope.

Strange graces still, and stranger flights he had;
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.

Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail. Pope.

9. Excursion on the wing.

If there were any certain height where the flights flights: of ambition end, one might imagine that the interests of France were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.

It is not only the utmost pitch of impropriety, but the highest flight of folly, to deride these things. Tillotson.

10. The power of flying.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft, I shot his fellow of the self-same flight. Shakespeare.

The self-same way. Shakespeare.

FLIGHTY. adj. [from flight.]

 Q*

with noise; to play with any noisy motion of a broad body.

A blackbird was frighted almost to death with a large flopping kite that she saw over her head.

FLO'RAL. adj. [floralis, Latin.] Relating to Flora, or to flowers.

Let one great day

To celebrated sports and floral play

Be set aside.

FLO'RENCE. n. f. [from the city Florence.] A kind of cloth.

FLO'REN. n. f. [So named, says Camden, because made by Florentines.] A gold coin of Edward III. in value six shillings.

FLO'RET. n. f. [flourette, French.] A small imperfect flower.

FLORID. adj. [floridus, Latin.]

1. Productive of flowers; covered with flowers.

2. Bright in colour; flushed with red.

Our beauty is in colour inferior to many flowers; and when it is most florid and gay, three fits of an ague can change it into yellowness and leanness.

The qualities of blood in a healthy state are to be florid, when let out of the vessel, the red part coagulating strongly and soon.

3. Embellished; splendid; brilliant with decorations.

The florid, elevated, and figurative way is for the passions; for love and hatred, fear and anger, are begotten in the soul, by shewing their objects out of their true proportion.

How did, pray, the florid youth offend, Whose speech you took, and gave it to a friend?

FLORIDITY. n. f. [from florid.] Freshness of colour.

There is a floridity in the face from the good digestion of the red part of the blood.

FLORIDNESS. n. f. [from florid.]

1. Freshness of colour.

2. Embellishment; ambitious elegance.

Though a philosopher need not delight readers with his floridness, yet he may take care that he disgust them not by flatness.

FLORIFEROUS. adj. [florifer, Latin.] Productive of flowers.

FLO'RIN. n. f. [French.] A coin first made by the Florentines. That of Germany is in value 2 s. 4 d. that of Spain 4 s. 4 d. halfpenny; that of Palermo and Sicily 2 s. 6 d. that of Holland 2 s.

In the Imperial chamber the proctors have half a florin taxed and allowed them for every substantial recess.

FLO'RIST. n. f. [floriste, French.] A cultivator of flowers.

Some botanists or florists at the least.

And while they break

On the charm'd eye, the exulting florist marks With secret pride the wonders of his hand.

FLORULENT. adj. [floris, Latin.] Flowery; blossoming.

FLOSCULOUS. adj. [flosculus, Lat.] Composed of flowers; having the nature or form of flowers.

The outward part is a thick and carnosous covering, and the second a dry and flosculus coat.

TO FLOTE. v. a. [See To float.] To skim.

Such cheeses, good Cisleys, ye floted too nigh.

FLO'TSON. n. f. [from flote.] Goods that swim without an owner on the sea.

FLO'TTEN. part. [from flote.] Skimmed. Skinn.

TO FLOUNCE. v. n. [plouzen, Dutch, to plunge.]

1. To move with violence in the water or mire; to struggle or dash in the water.

With his broad fins and forked tail he laves

The rising surge, and flounces in the waves.

TO FLOUNCE. v. a. [See To float.] To skim.

Such cheeses, good Cisleys, ye floted too nigh.

FLO'TSON. n. f. [from flote.] Goods that swim without an owner on the sea.

FLO'TTEN. part. [from flote.] Skimmed. Skinn.

TO FLOUNCE. v. n. [plouzen, Dutch, to plunge.]

1. To move with violence in the water or mire; to struggle or dash in the water.

With his broad fins and forked tail he laves

The rising surge, and flounces in the waves.

TO FLOUNCE. v. a. [See To float.] To skim.

Such cheeses, good Cisleys, ye floted too nigh.

FLO'TSON. n. f. [from flote.] Goods that swim without an owner on the sea.

FLO'TTEN. part. [from flote.] Skimmed. Skinn.

TO FLOUNCE. v. n. [plouzen, Dutch, to plunge.]

1. To move with violence in the water or mire; to struggle or dash in the water.

With his broad fins and forked tail he laves

The rising surge, and flounces in the waves.

TO FLOUNCE. v. a. [See To float.] To skim.

Such cheeses, good Cisleys, ye floted too nigh.

TO FLOUNCE. v. a. To deck with flounces.

She was flounced and furbelowed from head to foot; every ribbon was crinkled, and every part of her garments in curl.

They have got into the fashion of flouncing the petticoat so very deep, that it looks like an entire coat of lutestring.

FLOUNCE. n. f. [from the verb.] Any thing sewed to the garment, and hanging loose, so as to swell and shake.

Nay, oft in dreams invention we bestow,

To change a flounce, or add a furbelow.

A muslin flounce, made very full, would be very agreeable.

FLOUNDER. n. f. [flynder, Danish; fluke, Scottish.] The name of a small flat fish.

Like the flounder, out of the frying-pan into the fire.

Flounders will both thrive and breed in any pond.

TO FLOUNDER. v. n. [from flounce.] To struggle with violent and irregular motions: as a horse in the mire.

Down goes at once the horseman and the horse; That courier stumbles on the fallen steed,

And flound'ring throws the rider o'er his head.

The more inform'd, the less he understood,

And deeper funk by flound'ring in the mud.

He plung'd for sense, but found no bottom there;

Then writ and flound'ring on in mere despair.

TO FLO'URISH. v. n. [floureo, flouresco, Latin.]

1. To be in vigour; not to fade.

The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree.

Where'er you tread, the blushing flow'rs shall rise,

And all things flourish where you turn your eyes.

2. To be in a prosperous state,

If I could find example

Of thousands, that had struck anointed kings,

And flourish'd after, I'd not dot: but since

Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one,

Let villainy itself forswear't.

He was the patron of my manhood, when I flourish'd in the opinion of the world, though with small advantage to my fortune.

Bal men as frequently prosper and flourish, and that by the means of their wickedness.

3. To use florid language; to speak with ambitious copiousness and elegance.

Whilst Cicero acts the part of a rhetorician, he dilates and flourishes, and gives example instead of rule.

They dilate sometimes, and flourish long upon little incidents, and they skip over and but lightly touch the drier part of their theme.

4. To describe various figures by intersecting lines; to play in wanton and irregular motions.

Impetuous spread

The stream, and smocking, flourish'd o'er his head.

5. To boast; to brag.

6. [In music.] To play some prelude without any settled rule.

TO FLO'URISH. v. a.

1. To adorn with vegetable beauty.

With shadowy verdure flourish'd high,

A sudden youth the groves enjoy.

2. To adorn with figures of needlework.

3. To work with a needle into figures.

All that I shall say will be but like bottoms of thread close wound up, which, with a good needle, perhaps may be flourish'd into large works.

4. To move any thing in quick circles or vibrations by way of show or triumph.

And all the powers of hell in full applause

Flourish'd their snakes, and tosd'd their flaming brands.

Against the post their wicker shields they crush, Flourish the sword, and at the plastron push.

5. To adorn with embellishments of language; to grace with eloquence ostentatiously diffusive.

The labours of Hercules, though flourish'd with much fabulous matter; yet notably set forth the content of all nations and ages in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating giants, monsters and tyrants.

As they are likely to over-flourish their own case, so their flattery is hardest to be discovered.

6. To adorn; to embellish; to grace.

To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin,

Sith that the justice of your title to him

Doth flourish the deceit.

1. Bravery; beauty; ambitious splendour.

I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,

The presentation of but what I was.

The flourish of his sober youth,

Was the pride of naked truth.

2. An ostentatious establishment; ambitious copiousness; far-fetched elegance.

This is a flourish: there follow excellent parables.

We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature.

The apprehension is so deeply rivetted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen or brush it out.

Villanies have not the same countenance, when there are great interests, plausible colours, and flourishes of wit and rhetoric interposed between the fight and the object.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, tho' least believed by them.

Studious to please the genius of the times,

With periods, points, and tropes he flurs his crimes;

He lards with flourishes his long harangue;

'Tis fine, say'st thou; what, to be prais'd and hang'd?

3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.

A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat characters and flourishes of a bible curiously printed.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishes about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye.

FLO'URISHER. n. f. [from flourish.] One that is in prime or in prosperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they may, or in his flow'r;

For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in power.

TO FLOUT. v. a. [fluyten, Dutch; flouvo, Frisick.] To mock; to insult; to treat with mockery and contempt.

You must flout my insufficiency.

The Norwegian banners flout the sky,

And fan our people cold.

He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices;

Certainly he flouted us downright.

She railed at her, that she should be so immodest to write to one she knew would flout her.

Phillida flouts me.

TO FLOUT. v. n. To practise mockery; to behave with contempt; to sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off this argument?

With talents well endu'd

To be scurrilous and rude;

When you perty raise your snout,

Flee and gibe, and laugh and flout.

FLOUT.

Flout. n. f. [from the verb.] A mock; an insult; a word or act of contempt.

He would ask of those that had been at the other's table, Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

She opened it, and read it out,
With many a smile and leering flout. Hudibras.

Their doors are barr'd against a bitter flout;
Snarl, if you please; but you shall snarl without. Dryden.

How many flouts and jeers must I expose myself to by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an intemperate cup? Calamy's Sermons.

FLOUTER. n. f. [from flout.] One who jeers.

TO FLOW. v. n. [flop, Saxon.]

1. To run or spread as water.

The god am I, whose yellow water flows Around these fields, and fattens as it goes. Dryden's Æneid.

Fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.

Endless tears flow down in streams. Swift.

2. To run; opposed to standing waters.

With o'erflows the standing water strow;
Of mally stones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden.

3. To rise; not to ebb.

This river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between. Shakespeare.

4. To melt.

Oh that thou wouldst rend the heavens, that the mountains might flow down at thy preference. Isaiah lxi. 1.

5. To proceed; to issue.

I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from 't
I shall do good. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The knowledge drawn from experience is quite of another kind from that which flows from speculation or discourse. South.

6. To glide smoothly without asperity: as, a flowing period.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been of a great wit and flowing eloquence. Hakewill on Providence.

7. To write smoothly; to speak volubly.

Virgil is sweet and flowing in his hexameters. Dryden.

Did sweeter sounds adorn thy flowing tongue
Than ever man pronounc'd, or angels sung. Prior.

8. To abound; to be crowded.

The dry streets flow'd with men. Chapman.

9. To be copious; to be full.

Then shall our names,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shakespeare's Henry V.

There ev'ry eye with flum'rous chains she bound,
And dash'd the flowing goblet to the ground. Pope's Odyssey.

10. To hang loose and waving.

He was clothed in a flowing mantle of green silk, interwoven with flowers. Spectator.

TO FLOW. v. a. To overflow; to deluge.

Watering hops is scarce practicable, unless you have a stream at hand to flow the ground. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Flow. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The rise of water; not the ebb.

Some from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the fluxes and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ebb of tides, and their mysterious flow;
We as arts elements shall understand. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.

The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood. Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better. South.

FLOWER. n. f. [fleur, French; flus, floris, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have a petala, a stamen, apex and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect.

Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller, and which usually have but one single stile; and compounded, which consist of many flosculi, all making but one flower.

Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one entire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petala, or leaves; as in borage, buglos; or polypetalous, which have distinct petala, and those falling off singly, and not altogether, as the seeming petala of monopetalous flowers always do; but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage and deadnettle.

A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the arilostochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and cordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcissus; but most commonly the upper lip is convex-above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and represents a kind of helmet, or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galleate, cucullate, and galericulate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Corniculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carnium, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are, first, discous, or discoidal; that is, whose flosculi are set so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched, and jagged, as the hieracia. 3d, Fistular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petala, are called stameneous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pennulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cattail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying ere they sicken. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

With flow'rs inwoven tresses torn,
The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton.

Beauteous flow'rs why do we spread Upon the mountains of the dead. Cowley.

Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

The nomination of persons to those places being so pruned and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would refer to himself. Clarendon.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Hakewill on Providence.

Truth needs no flower's of speech. Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long:
In flower of age you perish for a song. Pope's Horace Impr.

5. The edible part of corn; the meal.

The bread I would have in flour, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want. Spenser on Ireland.

I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flour of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The flour of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arlott on Aliments.

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd;
Next these in worth, and firm those urns be seal'd;
Be twice ten measures of the choicest flour
Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour. Pope's Odyssey.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the Psalms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hooker.

Thou hast slain
The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects: the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Addison.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable.

He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

FLOWER DE LUCE. n. f. A bulbous iris.

Miller specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Crop'd are the flower de lues in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The iris is the flower de luce. Peascham.

TO FLOW'ER. v. n. [flurir, French; or from the noun.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they marched in this goodly fort,
To take the solace of the open air,
And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport. Fairy Queen.

Sacred hill, whose head full high
Is, as it were, for endless memory
Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,
For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd. Fairy Queen.

Then herbs of ev'ry leaf, that sudden flow'rd, Op'ning their various colours. Milton's Par. Lost.

Mark well the flowering almonds in the wood,
If o'dorous blooms the bearing branches load. Dryden's Georg.

To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,
And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope's Messiah.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,
Like swallow swift, I wandered here and there;
For heat of heedless lust me did to sting,
That I of doubted danger had no fear. Spenser.

This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little; whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh. Bacon's Natural Hist.

FLU

An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits
To smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flow'ring.
Bacon's Natural History.

4. To come as cream from the surface.
If you can accept of these few observations, which have flow'ed off, and are, as it were, the burnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of.
Milton on Education.

To FLOW'ER, v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fictitious or imitated flowers.

FLOW'ERAGE, n. f. [from flower.] Store of flowers. Dict.

FLOW'ERET, n. f. [fleur, French.] A flower;
a small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would agnize
With gaudy garlands, or fresh flow'ers dight,
About her neck, or rings of ruffles plight.
Fairy Queen.

That same dew, which sometimes on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flow'ers eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail.
Shakespeare.

So to the sylvan lodge
They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flow'ers deck'd, and fragrant smells.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

Then laugh'd the childish year with flow'ers
crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around;
But no substantial nourishment receives,
Infirm the stalks, unfoli'd are the leaves.
Dryden's Fables.

FLOW'ERGARDEN, n. f. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.

Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try those shells in my flowergarden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLOW'ERINESS, n. f. [from flower.] y.
1. The state of abounding in flowers.

2. Floridness of speech.

FLOW'ERINGBUSH, n. f. A plant.

FLOW'ERY, adj. [from flower.] Full of flowers;
adorned with flowers real or fictitious.

My mother Circe, with the tyrens three,
Amidst the flow'ry kirtled Naiades. Milton.

Day's harbinger
Comes dancing from the East, and leads with her
The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose. Milton.

O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry vest he threw.
Pope's Odyssey.

To her the shady grove, the flow'ry field,
The streams and fountains, no delight could yield.
Pope.

FLOW'INGLY, adv. [from flow.] With volubi-lity; with abundance.

FLOWK, n. f. [fluke, Scott.] A flounder; the name of a fish.

Amongst these the flowk, sole, and plaice, follow the tide up into the fresh waters.

Cowley's Survey of Cornwall.

FLOW'EWORT, n. f. The name of a plant.

FLOWN, Participle of fly, or flie, they being confounded; property of fly.

1. Gone away.

For those,
Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
Flown to the upper world. Milton's Par. Lost.

Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate.

And when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the fons
Of Belial, flown with infolence and wine. Milton.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from your deeds I rightly may divine,
Unseemly flown with infolence or wine. Pope.

FLU'CTUANT, adj. [flu'ctuant, Latin.] Waver-ing; uncertain.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings,

FLU

and to stand wishing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this flu'ctuant wandering humour and opinion?
L'Estrange.

To FLU'CTUATE, v. n. [flu'ctuo, Latin.]
1. To roll to and again, as water in agitation.

The flu'ctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors hov'ring there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame.
Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motions of water.

3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter
New part puts on; and, as to passion mov'd, Flu'ctuant disturb'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has been hitherto of an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or flu'ctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements.
Addison's Spectator.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.

FLU'CTUATION, n. f. [flu'ctuation, Latin; flu'ctu- ation, French; from flu'ctuo.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Flu'ctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interja-cency irregulates. Brown.

They were caused by the impulses and flu'ctu- ation of water in the bowels of the earth.
Woodward's Natural History.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a profelyte of a person, that loves flu'ctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error. Boyle.

FLUE, n. f. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flow of fly.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLUELLIN, n. f. The herb SPEEDWELL.

FLU'ENCY, n. f. [from fluent.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit.

Garth's Preface to Ovid.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.

We reason with such fluency and fire,
The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire. Tickel.

The common fluency of speech in many men,
and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both. Swift's Thoughts on various Sub.

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease,
Behold him tost on seas. Sandy's Paraphrase on Job.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandy.

FLU'ENT, adj. [fluens, Latin.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluid, but stupi-fied. Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must do so the next. Ray on the Creation.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.

FLU

I shall lay before you all that's within me;
And with most fluent utterance. Denham's Song.

FLU'ENT, n. f. Stream; running water.

Confiding in their hands, that fed'ous strive
To cut th' outrageous fluents; in this distress, Ev'n in the fight of death. Philips.

FLU'ENTLY, adv. [from fluens.] With ready flow; volubly; readily; without obstruction or difficulty.

FLU'ID, adj. [fluidus, Latin; fluide, French.]

Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that fame wat'ry cloud, Left it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milb.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opticks.

FLU'ID, n. f.

1. Any thing not solid.

2. [In physics.] Any animal juice: as the blood, Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbutnot and Pope's Med.

FLU'IDITY, n. f. [fluidité, Fr. from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluid- ity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance.
Newton's Opticks.

A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity. Arbutnot.

FLU'IDNESS, n. f. [from fluid.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too! Boyle.

FLU'IMERY, n. f. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatflour or oatmeal.

Milk and flummary are very fit for children.
Locke.

FLUNG, participle and preterite of fling.

Thrown; cast.

Several statues the Romans themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge themselves. Addison on Italy.

FLU'OR, n. f. [Latin.]

1. A fluid state.

The particles of fluids, which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a flour, are most easily separated and rarefied into vapours. Newton's Opticks.

2. Catamenia.

FLU'RRY, n. f.

1. A gust or storm of wind; a hasty blast.

The boats were overfet by a sudden flurry from the North. Swift.

2. Hurry; a violent commotion.

To FLUSH, v. n. [fluxion, Dutch, to flow;
flux, or flux, Fr.]

1. To flow with violence.

The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly, and all at once, flush up and run over the vessel. Ray.

It flushes violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To come in haste.

If the place but affords
Any store of lucky birds,
As I make 'em to flush,
Each owl out of his bush. Ben Jonson's Owl.

3. To glow in the skin; to produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood. It is properly used of a sudden or transient heat of countenance; not of a settled complexion.

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her gauled eyes,
She married. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Thus

FLU

Thus Eve with count'nance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek distemper flushing glow'd.

What can be more significant than the sudden flushing and confusion of a blush?

What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood, which flushes guilty in your face?

At once, array'd
In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows.

4. To shine suddenly. Obsolete.
A flake of fire that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd.

TO FLUSH. v. a.
1. To colour; to redden; properly, to redden suddenly.

The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms.

Some court, or secret corner seek,
Nor flush with shame the passing virgin's cheek.

2. To elate; to elevate; to give the appearance of sudden joy.

A prosperous people, flush'd with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence.

FLUSH. adj.
1. Fresh; full of vigour.

He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save Heaven?

I love to wear cloths that are flush,
Not preface old rags with pluff.

2. Affluent; abounding. A cant word.
Lord Strut was not very flush in ready, either to go to law or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail.

FLUSH. n. f.
1. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow. This is commonly corrupted to flush: as, a flush of water.

Never had any man such a loss, cries the widow, in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife.

The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the coats of the arteries themselves.

Success may give him a present flush of joy; but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring.

2. Cards all of a sort.

TO FLUSTER. v. a. [from To flush.] To make hot and rosy with drinking; to make half drunk.

Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night flush'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too.

FLUTE. n. f. [flute, flute, French; fluyte, Dutch.]

1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.

Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke.

The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling flute.

2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.

TO FLUTE. v. a. To cut columns into hollows.

TO FLUTTER. v. n. [flöten, Saxon; flouter, French.]

1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.

As an eagle stirreth up her nest, flutters over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him.

Think you've an angel by the wings;
One that gladly will be nigh,
To wait upon each morning-sigh;
To flutter in the balmy air
Of your well-perfumed pray'r.

2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.

Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high.

No rag, no scrap of all the beau or wit,
That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ.

3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations.

Ye spirits! to your charge repair;
The fluttering fan be Zephyretta's care.
They the tall mast above the vessel rear,
Or teach the fluttering sail to float in air.

4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly; to be in a state of uncertainty.

The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and how long the fluttered upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surprised.

It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or disagreement of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in founts of doubtful signification.

Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance,
Produc'd by atoms from their fluttering dance!

His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering, and cannot be fixed attentively to a few ideas successively.

TO FLUTTER. v. a.

1. To drive in disorder, like a flock of birds suddenly roused.

Like an eagle in a dovecoat, I flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli.

2. To hurry the mind.

3. To disorder the position of any thing.

FLUTTER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Vibration; undulation; quick and irregular motion.

An infinite variety of motions are to be made use of in the flutter of a fan: there is the angry flutter, the modest flutter, and the timorous flutter.

2. Hurry; tumult; disorder of mind.

3. Confusion; irregular position.

FLUVIATICK. adj. [fluvaticus, Latin.] Belonging to rivers.

FLUX. n. f. [fluxus, Latin; flux, French.]

1. The act of flowing; passage.

The simple and primary motion of fire is a flux, in a direct line from the centre of the fuel to its circumference.

By the perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body.

2. The state of passing away and giving place to others.

Whether the heat of the sun in animals whose parts are successive, and in a continual flux, can produce a deep and perfect gloss of blackness.

What the stated rate of interest should be, in the constant change of affairs, and flux of money, is hard to determine.

In the constituent matter of one body, turning naturally to another like body, the stock or fund can never be exhausted, nor the flux and alteration sensible.

Languages, like our bodies, are in a perpetual flux, and stand in need of recruits to supply those words that are continually falling.

3. Any flow or issue of matter.

Quinces stop fluxes of blood.

4. Dysentery; disease in which the bowels are excoriated and bleed; bloody flux.

He might fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or flux'd into another world.

FLUXILITY. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.] Easiness of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction.

Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed aversion of nature to a vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least fluxility of the bodies here below.

FLUXION. n. f. [fluxio, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing.

2. The matter that flows.

The fluxion increased, and abscesses were raised.

3. [In mathematics.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small, or infinitely small quantity, which, being taken an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity given.

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life.

TO FLY. pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown.

v. n. [flēgan, Saxon. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown. To flee is to escape, or to go away. flean, Saxon, and makes fled. They are now confounded.]

1. To move through the air with wings.

Ere the bat hath flown

His cloister'd flight.

Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven.

These men's hastiness the warier sort of you do not commend: ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown.

2. To pass through the air.

Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward.

3. To pass away, with the idea of swiftness or escape.

Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme,
Help thee to pass the tedious time,
Which else would on thy hand remain;
Though flown, it ne'er looks back again.

4. To pass swiftly.

The scouts with flying speed
Return, and through the city spread the news.

Earth rolls back beneath the flying steed.

5. To move with rapidity.

As striplings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about.

6. To part with violence.

Glad to catch this good occasion,
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly afunder.

He balfas heads, to save his own, made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, must die.

7. To break; to shiver; to burst asunder with a sudden explosion.

Behold, a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies.

8. [flean, Saxon; fliehn, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. [In this sense the verb is properly to flee, when fled is formed; but the following examples shew that they are confounded.]

ed: they are confounded oftener in the present than in the preter tense.]

Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spenser.

You shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake. Zech. xiv. 5.

Abiathar escaped, and fled after David.

1 Samuel, xxii. 20.

What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,
Reviv'd the drooping arts again;
If science rais'd her head,

And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled. Dryd.

He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,

And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.

I'll fly from shepherds, flocks and flow'ry plains;

From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,

Forfake mankind, and all the world but love.

Pope.

9. To FLY et. To spring with violence upon;
to fall on suddenly.

A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, therat enrag'd, Flew on him, and amongst them fell him dead.

Shakespeare.

Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and bark and fly at him.

Bacon's Natural History.

No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat.

South's Sermons.

This is an age that flies at all learnings, and enquires especially into faults.

South.

10. To FLY in the face. To insult.

This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself.

Swift's Drapier's Letters.

11. To FLY in the face. To act in defiance.

Fly in nature's face:

—But how, if nature fly in my face first?

—Then nature's the aggressor. Dryden's Span. Fry.

12. To FLY off. To revolt.

Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,

They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;
The images of revolt and flying off. Shakel. K. Lear.

The traitor Syphax

Flew off at once with his Numidian horse.

Addison's Cato.

13. To FLY out. To burst into passion.

How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out.
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks.

Ben Jonson's Catiline.

Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect.

Collier of Friendship.

14. To FLY out. To break out into licence.

You use me like a courser spur'd and rein'd:
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dryden.

Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent. Dryden.

15. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.

All bodies, mov'd circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained.

Bentley's Sermons.

16. To let FLY. To discharge.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, let fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rend'd sky. Grav.

17. To be light and unencumbered: as, a flying camp.

To FLY. v. a.

1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;

Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues.

Shakespeare.

O Jove, I think

Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakespeare.

If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it.

Bacon's Essays.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The fight of this so horrid spectacle.

Milton's Agonistes.

2. To refuse association with.

Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares oppress'd,

And his toils'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.

3. To quit by flight.

Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who fail'd in air.

Dryden's Æneid.

4. To attack by a bird of prey.

If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth.

Bacon.

5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape: flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded. I know not any book except the Scriptures in which fly and flee are carefully kept separate.

FLY. n. f. [fleege, Saxon.]

1. A small winged insect of many species.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakel. King Lear.

My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn.

Locke.

To prevent the fly, some propose to sow ashes with the feed.

Martinet's Husbandry.

To heedless flies the window proves
A constant death.

Thomson's Summer.

2. That part of a machine, which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalises the motion of the rest.

If we suppose a man tied in the place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground.

Wilkins.

3. That part of a vane which points how the wind blows.

To FLY'BLEW. v. a. [fly and blow.] To taint with flies; to fill with maggots.

I am unwilling to believe that he designs to play tricks, and to flyblow my words, to make others distrust them.

Stillingfleet.

Like a flyblown cake of tallow;
Or, on parchment, ink turn'd yellow.

Swift.

So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and flyblow in the setting sun.

Pope.

FLY'BOAT. n. f. [fly and boat.] A kind of vessel nimble and light for sailing.

FLY'CATCHER. n. f. [fly and catch.] One that hunts flies.

There was more need of Brutus in Domitian's days, to mend, than of Horace, to laugh at a fly-catcher.

Dryden.

The swallow was a flycatcher as well as the spider.

L'Estrange.

FLY'ER. n. f. [from fly.]

1. One that flies or runs away. This is written more frequently flier.

They hit one another with darts, as the others do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the flier.

Sandys's Journey.

He grieves for many Britons should be lost;
Taking more pains, when he beheld them yield,

To save the fliers than to win the field.

Waller.

2. One that uses wings.

3. The fly of a jack.

4. [In architecture.] Stairs made of an oblong square figure, whose fore and back sides are parallel to each other, and so are their ends: the second of these fliers stands parallel behind the first, the third behind the second, and so are said to fly off from one another.

shall next give you some other directions for fly-fishing.

Walton's Angler.

FOAL. n. f. [foala, Saxon.] The offspring of a mare, or other beast of burthen. The custom now is to use colt for a young horse, and foal for a young mare; but there was not originally any such distinction.

Also flew his steed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind,
As he had been a foal of Pegasus's kind.

Fairy Queen.

Twenty she-asses and ten foals. Gen. xxxii. 15.

To FOAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth. Used of mares.

Give my horse to Timon: it foals me straight Ten able horses.

Shakespeare's Timon.

Such colts as are

Of generous race, straight, when they first are foal'd,

Walk proudly.

May's Georgicks.

To FOAL. v. n. To be disturbed of the foetus. Used of beasts of burthen.

He foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth.

Mark, ix. 18.

FO'AMY. adj. [from foam.] Covered with foam; frothy.

More white than Neptune's foamy face,
When struggling rocks he would embrace.

Sidney.

Behold how high the foamy billows ride!
The winds and waves are on the jutting side.

Dryden.

FOB. n. f. [suppe, fupfack, German.] A small pocket.

Who pick'd a fob at holding forth. Hudibras.

When were the dice with more profusion thrown?

The well-fill'd fob, not empty'd now alone.

Dryden's Juvenal.

He put his hand into his fob, and presented me in his name with a tobacco-stopper.

Addison's Spectator.

Two pockets he called his fobs: they were two large flits squeezed close by the pressure of his belly.

Swift.

Orphans around his bed the lawyer fees,
And takes the plaintiff's and defendant's fees;

His fellow pick-purse, watching for a job,
Fancies his finger in the cully's fob.

Swift.

when thou art king, and resolution thus fob'd as it is with the rusty curb of old father antick the law.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

He goes pressing forward, 'till he was fobbed again with another story.

L'Estrange.

2. To FOB off. To shift off; to put aside with an artifice; to delude by a trick.

Yea

FOE

You must not think
To fob off your disgraces with a tale.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

For they, poor knaves, were glad to cheat,
To get their wives and children meat;
But these will not be fob'd off so,
They must have wealth and power too.

Hudib.

By a Ravenna vintner once betray'd,
So much for wine and water mix'd I paid;
But when I thought the purchas'd liquor mine,
The rascal fob'd me off with only wine. Addison.
Being a great lover of country-sports, I absolutely determined not to be a minister of state, nor to be fob'd off with a garter. Addison's Freeholder.

FO'CAL. adj. [from focus.] belonging to the fo-

FOG. n. f. [fog, Danish, a storm.] A thick mist; a moist dense vapour near the surface of the land or water.

Infect her beauty,

You fensuck'd fogs drawn by the pow'rful sun,
To fall and blast her pride.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, present great alterations in the sun and moon.

Ral. Hist. of the World.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away;
Taint not the pure streams of the springing day

With your dull influence: it is for you

To fit and scoule upon night's heavy brow. Crafb.

Fogs we frequently observe after sunsetting, even in our hottest months.

Woodward's Nat. Hist.

FOG. n. f. [fogginum; low Latin. Gramen in fo- resta regis locatur pro fogagio. Lgis foreß. Scoticæ.]

shun the attacks of argument.

Watts's Logic.

To FOIL. v. a. [affeler, to wound, old French.]

FOI

1. To put to the worst; to defeat, though without a complete victory.

Amazement seiz'd

The rebel thrones; but greater rage to see

Thus foil'd their mightiest.

Milton.

Leader of those armies bright,

Which but th' omnipotent none could have foil'd!

Milton.

Yet these subject not: I to thee disclose
What inward thence I feel, not therefore foil'd:

Who meet with various objects, from the sense
Variously representing; yet still free,

Approve the best, and follow what I approve.

Milton.

Strange, that your fingers should the pencil foil,
Without the help of colours or of oil!

Waller.

He had been foiled in the cure, and had left it to nature.

Wifeman's Surgery.

In their conflicts with sin they have been so often foiled, that they now despair of ever getting the day.

Calamy's Sermons.

Virtue, disdain, despair, I oft have try'd;
And, foil'd, have with new arms my foe defy'd.

Dryden.

But I, the confort of the thunderer,
Have wag'd a long and unsuccessful war;
With various arts and arms in vain have toy'd,
And by a mortal man at length am foil'd.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. [Fouiller, French.] To blunt; to dull.

When light-wing'd toys

Of feather'd Cupid foil'd, with wanton dulness,
My speculative and offic'd instruments. Shaksp.

3. To defeat; to puzzle.

Whilst I am following one character, I am cross'd in my way by another, and put up such a variety of odd creatures in both sexes, that they foil the scent of one another, and puzzle the chace.

Addison.

FOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A defeat; a miscarriage; an advantage gained without a complete conquest.

• We of thy cunning had no diffidence;
One sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Whoever overthrowth his mate in such fort, as that either his back, or the one shoulder, and contrary heel do touch the ground, shall be accounted to give the fall: if he be endangered, and make a narrow escape, it is called a foil.

Carew.

So after many a foil the temper proud,
Renewing fresh assaults, amidst his pride,
Fell whence he stood to see his victor fall.

Milton.

When age shall level me to impotence,
And sweating pleasure leave me on the foil.

Southern.

Death never won a stake with greater toil,
Nor e'er was fate so near a foil.

Dryden.

2. [Feuille, French.] Leaf; gilding.

A stately palace, built of squared brick,
Which cunningly was without mortar laid,
Whose walls were high, but nothing strong nor thick,

And golden foil all over them display'd.

Newton's Opticks.

FOLIA'TION. n. f. [from foliatio, folium, Latin.]

1. The act of beating into thin leaves.

2. Foliation is one of the parts of the flower, being the collection of those fugacious coloured leaves called petala, which constitute the compass of the flower; and sometimes guard the fruit which succeeds the foliation, as in apples and pears, and sometimes stand within it, as in cherries and apricots; for these, being tender and pulpy, and coming forth in the Spring, would be injured by the weather, if they were not lodged up within their flowers.

Quincy.

FO'LIATURE. n. f. [from foliatur, Latin.] The state of being hammered into leaves.

Ditt.

FO'LIO. n. f. [from folio, Latin.] A large book of which the pages are formed by a sheet of paper once doubled.

FOLK. n. f. [from folc, Saxon; wolk, Dutch: it is properly a noun collective, and has no plural but by modern corruption.]

1. People in familiar language.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather sitting to his dolor dolorous discourses of their own and other folk's misfortune. Sidney.

Dorilaus having married his sister, had his marriage in short time blest, for so are folk wont to say, how unhappy forever the children after grow, with a son.

Sidney.

When with greatest art he spoke, You'd think he talk'd like other folk;

For all our rhetorician's rules Teach nothing but to name his tools.

Hudibras.

2. Nations; mankind.

Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth.

Psalm, lvi. 4.

3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.

The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between; And the old fold, time's dotting chronicles,

Say it did so a little time before.

Shakspere.

Anger is a kind of baseness; as it appears well in the weakness of children, women, old folks, and sick folks.

Bacon.

4. It is now used only in familiar or burlesque language.

Old good man Dobson of the green, Remembers he the tree has seen,

And goes with folks to fiew the fight.

Swift.

He walk'd and wore a threadbare cloak; He din'd and sup'd at charge of other folk.

Swift.

FO'LMOTE. n. f. [from folk and mote.] Those hills were appointed for two special uses, and built by two several nations: the one is that which you call folkmates, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxon a meeting of folk.

Spenser on Ireland.

FO'LLICLE. n. f. [from folliculus, Latin.]

1. A cavity in any body with strong coats.

Although there be no eminent and circular follicles, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts.

Brown's Vulgar Errour.

2. Follicle is a term in botany signifying the seed-vessels, capsula seminalis, or case, which some fruits fruits

fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pedicularis, &c. Quincy.
To FOLLOV. v. a. [folgian, Saxon; volgen, Dutch.]

1. To go after; not before, or side by side.
I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Him all his train

Follow'd in bright procession, to behold
Creation, and the wonders of his might. Milton.

What could I do,

But follow strait, invisibly thus led? Milton

2. To pursue as an enemy; to chafe.

Where ranks fell thickest was indeed the place
To seek Sebastian, through a track of death

I follow'd him by groans of dying foes. Dryden.

3. To accompany; not to forsake.

Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain

God is as here, and will be found alike

Present, and of his presence many a sign

Still following thee, still compassing thee round

With goodness and paternal love, his face

Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.

Up he rode,

Follow'd with acclamation and the sound

Symphonious of ten thousand harps that tun'd

Angelic harmonies. Milton.

4. To attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and follow'd Saul to the battle. 1 Sam. xvii. 13.

Let not the muse then flatter lawless sway,

Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

5. To go after.

Not yielding over to old age his country delights, he was at that time following a merlin.

Sidney.

Some pious tears the pitying hero paid,

And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade.

Dryden's Æneid.

We follow fate, which does too fast pursue. Dry.

6. To succeed in order of time.

Such follow him as shall be register'd,

Part good, part bad, of bad the longer scroll. Mil.

Signs following signs, lead on the mighty year.

Pope.

7. To be consequential, as effects to causes.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold

And vent'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear

What yet they know must follow, to endure

Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain. Milton.

8. To imitate; to copy.

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancienter and better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse,

we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Hooker.

Ill patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke on Education.

9. To obey; to observe, as a guide or direction.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no Christians.

Tillotson.

Most men admire

Virtue, who follow not her lore. Par. Regain'd.

Fair virtue should I follow thee,

I should be naked and alone,

For thou art not in company,

And scarce art to be found in one. Evelyn.

10. To pursue as an object of desire.

Follow peace with all men. Hebrews.

Follow not that which is evil. John.

11. To confirm by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.

They bound themselves to his laws and obedience; and in case it had been followed upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility. Spenser.

12. To attend to; to be busied with.

He that undertaketh and followeth other mens business for gain, shall fall into suits. Ecclesi. xxix. 9.

To FOLLOW. v. n.

1. To come after another.

FOL

The famine shall follow close after you.

Jeremiah, xlii. 16.

Welcome all that lead or follow Ben Jonson.

To the oracle of Apollo.

2. To attend servilely.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion,

That in the nature of their lord rebels:

As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To be posterious in time.

4. To be consequential, as effect to cause.

If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness mislead him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.

5. To be consequential, as inference to pre-misses.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.

Dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power. Locke.

6. To continue endeavours; to persevere.

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. Hosea.

FOLLOWER. n. f. [from follow.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower;

but now you are a leader; whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels?

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise,

Spurn'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes.

Dryden.

2. One who observes a guide or leader.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide.

Soub's Sermons.

3. An attendant or dependant.

No follower, but a friend. Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, can't thou tell that?

—With Poins, and other his continual followers.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto the Irish chiefs too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. Spenser's State of Ireland.

And forc'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,

To leave his followers on a foreign coast.

Dryden's Æneid.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copyer.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ.

1 Cor. xi. 1.

The true profession of Christianity invariably engages all its followers to do good to all men.

Spratt's Sermons.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have.

Locke.

The church of Smyrna professed they worthily loved the martyrs, as the disciples and followers of our Lord; and because of their exceeding great affection to their king and their Master. Nelson.

The studious head or gen'rous mind,

Follower of God, or friend of human kind,

Poet or patriot, rose but to restore

The faith and moral nature gave before.

Pope's Essays.

7. One of the same faction or party.

FOLLOW. n. f. [folie, French.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

This is folly childhood's guide,

This is childhood at her side. Hawke'sworth.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

FON

Think'st thou, that dut; should have dread to speak,

When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour

Is bound, when majesty to folly falls.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see

The pretty follies that themselves commit;

For if they could, Cupid himself would blush

To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shakespeare.

Thy hum'rous vein, thy pleasing folly,

Lies all neglected, all forgot. Prior.

Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,

Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please.

Pope's Horace.

To FOMENT. v. a. [foment, r, Latin; foment, r, French.]

1. To cherish with heat.

Every kind that lives,

Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd.

Milton.

2. To bathe with warm lotions.

He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment

the forehead. Arbuthnot.

3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.

They love their givings, and foment their deeds

no less than parents do their children. Ifotson.

Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,

Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires.

Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them.

Locke.

FOMENTATION. n. f. [fomentation, French;
from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stumping, which is applying hot flannels to any part;

dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and discuss obstructed humours. Quincy.

Fomentation called forth the humour by vapours;

but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultice, draweth gently the humours out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stu-pefactive. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians;

and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses.

Arbuthnot on Gains.

FOMENTER. n. f. [from foment.] One that fo-ments; an encourager; a supporter.

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politic at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up. Howell.

FON. n. f. [Scott. A word now obsolete.] A fool; an idiot.

Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,

That love's the thing he cannot purchase.

Spenser's Pastorals.

FOND. n. f. [fon, Scottish. A word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology. To fond is in Chaucer to doat, to be foolish.]

1. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent; injudicious.

That the Grecians or Gentiles ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion

by sermons, we have not heard. Hooker.

He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond schoolmaster. Ascham.

Tell these sad women,

'Tis fond to wait inevitable strokes,

As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Grant I may never prove so fond

To trust man on his oath or bond. Shakespeare's Time.

I am weaker than a woman's tear,

Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance.

Shakespeare.

Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;

But one belief of all, is ever wife. Davila.

Vol. I. No. 18. 4 R. Two

FON

Thou see'st

How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I relate;
Fond! were it not in hope of thy reply.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

So fond are mortal men,
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves t' invite.

Milton's Agonistes.

'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
Thou'st as's ears on Midas, temples hung;
But fond repentance of his happy with. Waller.
But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infinites.

Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself. Tilkinson.

2. Trifling; valued by folly.

Not with fond thekles of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rate are either rich or poor
As fancy values them. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.
3. Foolishly tender; injudiciously indulgent.

I'm a foolish fond wife. Addison.

Like Venus I'll shine,
Be fond and be fine. Addison.

4. Pleased in too great a degree; foolishly delighted: with of.

Fame is in itself a real good, if we may believe Cicero, who was perhaps too fond of it. Dryden.

I, fond of my well-chosen seat,
My pictures, medals, books complete. Prior.
Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them.

Watts on the Mind.

To FOND. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat To FONDLE. f with great indulgence; to caress; to coddle.

How'er unjust your jealousy appear,
It does my pity, not my anger move:
I'll fond it as the froward child of love.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

When amidst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fonds thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
Thou may'st infuse thy venom in her veins.

Dryden's Æneid.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Swift.

To FOND. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love with; to dote on.

How will this sadge? My master loves her dearly;

And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakspeare.

FONDLER. n. f. [from fond.] One who fonds les.

FONDLING. n. f. [from fondle.] A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.

Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky; for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least coddled make the best and wisest men. L'Estrange.

The bent of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own. Locke.

Any body would have guessed mis to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

Bred a fondling and an heirless,
Dress'd like any lady may'refs;
Coddler'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

FONDLY. adv. [from fond.]
1. Foolishly; weakly; imprudently; injudiciously.

Makes him speak fondly, like a frantick man.

Shakspeare's Richard II.

FOO

Ficinus fondly adviseth, for the prolongation of life, that a vein be opened in the arm of some wholesome young man, and the blood to be sucked.

Bacon's Natural History.

The military mound
For their proud foes, that fondly brav'd their fate.

Philips.

Some valuing those of their own side or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind:
Fondly we think we merit honour then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men.

Pope.

Under those sacred leaves, secure
From common lightning of the skies,
He fondly thought he might endure
The flashes of Ardelia's eyes. Swift.

2. With great or extreme tenderness.
Ev'n before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched sylph too fondly interpos'd:
Fate urg'd the sheers, and cut the sylph in twain.

of judgment.

Fondness it were for any, being free,
To covet fetters, though they golden be.

Spenser's Sonnets.

2. Foolish tenderness.
My heart had still some foolish fondness for thee;
But hence! 'tis gone: I give it to the winds.

Addison's Cato.

Hopeless mother!

Whose fondness could compare her mortal offspring
To those which fair Latona bore to Jove. Prior.

3. Tender passion.

Your jealousy perverts my meaning still;
My very hate is construed into fondness.

A. Philips's Discreet Mother.

Corinna with that youthful air,
Is thirty, and a bit to spare:
Her fondness for a certain earl Began when I was but a girl.

Swift.

4. Unreasonable liking.

They err that either through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing that is less than a sincere resolution of new obedience, attended with faithful endeavour, and meet fruits of this change.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

FONE. n. f. Plural of foe. Obsolete.

A barbarous troop of clownish fone. Spenser.

FONTA'NGE. n. f. [from the name of the first wearer.] A knot of ribbands on the top of the head-dress. Out of use.

These old-fashioned fontanges rose an ell above the head: they were pointed like steeples, and had long loose pieces of crape, which were fringed, and hung down their backs. Addison.

FOOD. n. f. [frædan, Sax. voeden, Dut. to feed;
feed, Scott.]

1. Victuals; provision for the mouth.

On my knees I beg,
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food.

Shakspeare.

Much food is in the tillage of the poor.

Proverbs, xiii. 23.

Under my lowly roof thou hast vouchsaf'd
To enter, and these earthly fruits to taste;

Food not of angels, yet accepted so,
As that more willingly thou could'st not seem
At heav'n's high feasts t' have fed. Milt. Par. Left.

FOO

They give us food, which may with nectar vie,
And wax that does the absent sun supply. Waller.
2. Any thing that nourishes.

Give me some musick: musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love.

Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

O dear son Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say, I had eyes again. Shakspeare's King Lear.

FOODFUL. adj. [food and full.] Fruitful; full of food; plenteous.

There Tityus was to see, who took his birth
From heav'n; his nursing from the foodful earth.

To be thought knowing, you must first put the fool upon all mankind. Dryden's Juvenal, Pref.

4. One who counterfeit's folly; a buffoon; a jester.

Where's my knave, my fool! Go you, and call my fool hither. Shakspeare's King Lear.

I scorn, although their drudge, to be their fool
or jester. Milton.

If this disguise fit not naturally on so grave a person, yet it may become him better than that fool's coat. Denham.

5. To play the FOOL. To play pranks like a hired jester; to jest; to make sport.

I returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool. Sidney.

6. To play the FOOL. To act like one void of common understanding.

Well, thus we play the fools with the time, and the spirits of the wife fit in the clouds and mock us. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Is it worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to play the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self? Locke.

7. To make a FOOL of. To disappoint; to defeat.

'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.

Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

To FOOL. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle; to toy; to play; to idle; to sport.

I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still. Shakspeare's Temp.

Fool not; for all may have,
If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave. Hortert.

If you have the luck to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not. Denham.

It must be an industrious youth that provides against age; and he that fools away the one, must either beg or starve in the other. L'Estrange.

He must be happy that knows the true measures of fooling. L'Estrange.

Is this a time for fooling? Dryden's Span. Fair.

To FOOL. v. a.

J. To

1. To treat with contempt; to disappoint; to frustrate; to defeat.

And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and thook off?

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Him over-weaning
To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting,
Fool'd and beguil'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

If men loved to be deceived and fool'd about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that, which can be known only from their own heart.

South's Sermons.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
For fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit. Dry.
I'm tir'd with waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old.

Dryden.

I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fool'd and imposed upon.

Addison's Freeholder.

2. To infatuate; to make foolish.

If it be you that stir these daughters hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much
To bear it tamely.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

When I am read, thou feign'st a weak applause,
As if thou wert my friend, but lackest a cause:
This but thy judgment fools; the other way
Would both thy folly and thy spite betray.

Ben Jonson.

It were an handsome plot,
But full of difficulties, and uncertain;
And he's so fool'd with downright honesty,
He'll ne'er believe it.

Denham's Sophy.

Along and eternal adieu to all unlawful pleasures: I will no longer be fool'd or imposed upon by them.

Calamy's Sermons.

A boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty.

Temple.

3. To cheat: as, to fool one of his money.

FOOLBORN. adj. [fool and born.] Foolish from the birth.

Reply not to me with a foolborn jest.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FOOLERY. n. f. [from fool.]

1. Habitual folly.

Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where: I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master
as with my mistress.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

2. An act of folly; trifling practice.

It is meer foolery to multiply distinct particulars in treating of things, where the difference lies only in words.

Watts.

3. Object of folly.

That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected.

Raleigh's History.

We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understood, we should despise.

L'Estrange.

FOOL-HAPPY. adj. [fool and happy.] Lucky without contrivance or judgment.

As when a ship, that flies fair under fail,
An hidden rock escaped unawares,

That lay in wait her wreck for too bewail;
The mariner, yet half amazed, stares

At perils past, and yet in doubt ne dares
To joy at his foolhappy oversight.

Fairy Queen.

FOOLHARDINESS. n. f. [from foolhardy.] Mad rashness; courage without sense.

There is a difference betwixt daring and foolbardiness: Lucan and Statius often ventured them too far, our Virgil never.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

A false glozing parasite would call his foolbardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly.

Soth.

FOOLHARDISE. n. f. [fool and hardisse, Fr.]
Foolhardiness; adventurousness without judgment.

Obsolete.

More huge in strength than wife in work he was,
And reason with foolhardise over-ran;

Stern melancholy did his courage pass,
And was, for terror more, all arm'd in shining brafs.

Fairy Queen.

FOOLHARDY. adj. [fool and hardy.] Daring without judgment; madly adventurous; foolishly bold.

It is a foolish thing to make a long prologue, and to be short in the story itself.

2 Mac. ii. 32.

What could the head perform alone,
If all their friendly aids were gone?

A foolish figure he must make;
Do nothing else but sleep and ake.

Prior.

He allows himself in foolish hatreds and resentments against particular persons, without considering that he is to love every body as himself.

Law.

4. [In Scripture.] Wicked; sinful.

FOOLISHLY. adv. [from foolish.] Weakly;
without understanding. In Scripture, wickedly.

Although we boast our winter fun looks bright,
And foolishly are glad to see it in its height;

Yet so much sooner comes the long and gloomy night.

Swift.

FOOLISHNESS. n. f. [from foolish.]

1. Folly; want of understanding.

2. Foolish practice; actual deviation from the right.

Foolishness being properly a man's deviation from right reason, in point of practice, must needs consist in his pitching upon such an end as is unsuitable to his condition, or pitching upon means unsuitable to the compassing of his end.

South.

Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,
And shape my foolishness to their desire.

Prior.

FOOT. n. f. plural feet. [Fr., Saxon; voet, Dutch; fut, Scottish.]

1. The part upon which we stand.

The Queen that bore thee,
Off'ner upon her knees than on her feet,
Died ev'ry day she liv'd.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

His affection to the church was so notorious, that he never deserted it, 'till both it and he were over-run and trod under foot.

Clarendon.

2. That by which any thing is supported in the nature of a foot; as, the foot of a table.

3. The lower part; the base.

Yond' towers, whose wanton tops do bus the clouds,

Must kiss their own feet.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cress.

Fretting, by little and little, washes away and eats out both the tops and sides and feet of mountains.

Hakewill.

4. The end; the lower part.

What dismal cries are those?
—Nothing; a trifling fun of misery,
New added to the foot of thy account:
Thy wife is seiz'd by force, and born away.

Dryden's Cleomen.

5. The act of walking.

Antiochus departed, weening in his pride to make the land navigable, and the sea passable by foot.

2 Mac. v. 21.

Thrice horse and foot about the fires are led,
And thrice with loud laments they wail the dead.

Dryden.

9. State; character; condition.

See on what foot we stand; a scanty shore,
The sea behind, our enemies before.

In specifying the word Ireland, it would seem to insinuate that we are not upon the same foot with our fellow-subjects in England.

Swift's Drapier's Letters.

What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, the negroes, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant fine upon the man who murders them?

Addison.

10. Scheme; plan; settlement.

There is no well wisher to this country without a little hope, that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot.

Swift.

I ask, whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late king James, a king of England may be deposed?

Swift.

11. A state of incipient existence; first motion.

Little used but in the following phrase.

If such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated.

Tillotson.

12. It seems to have been once proverbially used for the level, the square, par.

Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot.

Bacon's Essays.

13. A certain number of syllables constituting a distinct part of a verse.

Feet, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints, be sure signs that the verse is either born deformed, unnatural, or lame.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Didst thou here these verses?

—O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some o' them had in them more feet than the verses would bear.

Shakespeare.

And Sidney's verse halts ill on Roman feet.

14. Motion; action.

While other jests are something rank on foot,
Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender to marry.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their congruity, in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable.

Grew.

15. Step.

This man's son would, every foot and anon, be taking some of his companions into the orchard.

L'Estrange.

16. A measure containing twelve inches: supposed to be the length of a man's foot.

When it signifies measure, it has often, but vitiously, foot in the plural.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four feet deep within the earth, came fourth no ways mouldy or rotten.

Bacon.

FOO

FOOT. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To dance; to tread wantonly; to trip.
 Lonely the vale and full of horror stood,
 Brown with the shade of a religious wood;
 The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;
 He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
 That featly footing seem'd to skim the ground.
Dryden.
 2. To walk; not ride; not fly.
 By this the dreadful beast drew nigh to land,
 Half flying, and half footing in his haste.
Fairy Queen.
 Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot
 By night. Shakespeare.
 The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed it himself. L'Estrange.
 If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try, for once, who can foot the farthest. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
 With them a man sometimes cannot be a penitent, unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such a pretended saint. South.
FOOT. v. a.
 1. To spurn; to kick.
 You, that did void your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold. Shakespeare.
 2. To fettle; to begin to fix.
 What confederacy have you with the traitors Late footed in the kingdom? Shakespeare's King Lear.
 3. To tread.
 Saint Withold footed thrice the wold:
 He met the night-mare, and her name told;
 Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
 And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
 There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
 Or shepherd boy, they featly foot the green. Tickell.
 4. To hold with the foot. Not in use.
 We are the earth, and they,
 Like moles within us, heave and cast about;
 And till they foot and clutch their prey,
 They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.
FOOTBALL. n. f. [foot and ball.]
 1. A ball commonly made of a blown bladder, cased with leather, driven by the foot.
 Am I so round with you as you with me,
 That like a football you do spurn me thus?
Shakespeare.
 Such a Winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of Winter; as footballs, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice.
Peacham.
 As when a fort of lusty shepherds try
 Their force at football, cape of victory
 Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
 That their encounter seems to rough for jest.
Waller.
 One rolls along a football to his foes,
 One with a broken truncheon deals his blows.
Dryden.
 2. The sport or practice of kicking the football.
 He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise.
Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scribl.
FOOTBOY. n. f. [foot and boy.] A low menial;
 an attendant in livery.
 Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
 This honest man, wait like a lowly footboy
 At chamber-door? Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 Though I had nobody to assist but a footboy, yet
 I made shift to try a pretty number of things.
Boyle on Colours.
 Whenever he imagines advantages will redound to one of his footboy, by oppression of me, he never disputes it. Swift.
FOOTBRIDGE. n. f. [foot and bridge.] A bridge on which passengers walk; a narrow bridge.
 Palemon's shepherd, fearing the footbridge was not strong enough, loaded it so long, till he broke that which would have born a bigger burden.
Sidney.
FOOTCLOATH. n. f. [foot and cloth.] A sumpter cloth.

FOO

Three times a-day my footcloth horse did stumble,
 And started when he looked upon the Tower,
 As loth to bear me to the slaughterhouse.
Shakespeare's Richard III.
FOOTED. adj. [from foot.] Shaped in the foot.
 Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Grew.
FOOTFIGHT. n. f. [foot and fight.] A fight made on foot, in opposition to that on horseback.
 So began our footfight in such fort, that we were well entered to blood of both sides. Sidney.
FOOTHOLD. n. f. [foot and hold.] Space to hold the foot; space on which one may tread surely.
 All fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it to little foothold, that the first blast laid it flat upon the ground. L'Estrange.
 He's at the top; he has nothing above him to aspire to, nor any foothold left him to come down
 by. L'Estrange.
FOOTING. n. f. [from foot.]
 1. Ground for the foot.
 I'll read your matter deep and dangerous;
 As full of peril and advent'rous spirit
 As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
 On the unsteadfast footing of a spear. Shakespeare.
 As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
 Did shew the footing found, for all the flood.
Davies.
 In accents, every step gained is a footing and help to the next. Holder's Element of Speech.
 2. Support: root.
 Set cloven flukes; and, wond'rous to behold,
 Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,
 And the dry poles produce a living race. Dryd. Virg.
 3. Basis; foundation.
 All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here: the mind stirs not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered.
Locke.
 The reasoning faculties of the soul would not know how to move, for want of a foundation and footing in most men, who cannot trace truth to its fountain and original. Locke.
 4. Place; possession.
 Whether the unctuous exhalations are,
 Fir'd by the sun, or seeming so alone;
 Or each some more remote and slippery star,
 Which loses footing when to mortals shewn. Dryd.
 5. Tread; walk.
 As he forward moved his footing old,
 So backward still was turned his wrinkled face.
Spenser.
 I would outnight you did no body come:
 But hark, I hear the footing of a man.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
 Break off, break off; I feel the different sound
 Of some chaste footing near about this ground. Milt.
 6. Dance.
 Make holiday: your rye straw hats put on,
 And these fresh nymphs encounter every one In country footing. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 7. Steps; road; track.
 He grew strong among the Irish; and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his said name. Spenser on Ireland.
 Like running weeds, that have no certain root;
 or like footings up and down, impossible to be traced. Bacon's Henry VII.
 8. Entrance; beginning; establishment.
 Ever since our nation had any footing in this land,
 the state of England did desire to perfect the conquest. Davies.
 The defeat of colonel Bellasis gave them their first footing in Yorkshire. Clarendon.
 No useful arts have yet found footing here:
 But all untaught and savage does appear.
Dryden's Indian Emperor.
 9. State; condition; settlement.
 Gaul was on the same footing with Egypt, as to taxes. Arbutnot.
FOOTLICKER. n. f. [foot and lick.] A slave;
 an humble fawner; one who licks the foot.
 Do that good mischief which may make this island
 Thine own for ever; and I, thy Caliban,
 For ay thy footlicker. Shakespeare's Tempest.

FOP

FOOTMAN. n. f. [foot and man.]
 1. A soldier that marches and fights on foot.
 The numbers levied by her lieutenant did consist of footmen three millions, of horsemen one million.
Raleigh's History.
 2. A low menial servant in livery.
 He was carried in a rich chariot, litterwise, with two horses at either end, and two footmen on each side. Bacon.
 Like footmen running before coaches,
 To tell the inn what lord approaches. Prior.
 3. One who practises to walk or run.
FOOTMANSHIP. n. f. [from footman.] The art or faculty of a runner.
 The Irish archers espying this, suddenly broke up, and committed the safety of their lives to their nimble footman'ship. Hayward.
 Yet, says the fox, I have baffled more of them with my wiles and shifts than ever you did with your footman'ship. L'Estrange.
FOOTPACE. n. f. [foot and pace.]
 1. Part of a pair of stairs, whereon, after four or five steps, you arrive to a broad place, where you make two or three paces before you ascend another step, thereby to ease the legs in ascending the rest of the stairs. Maxim.
 2. A pace no faster than a slow walk.
FOOTPAD. n. f. [foot and pad.] A highwayman that robs on foot, not on horseback.
FOOTPATH. n. f. [foot and path.] A narrow way which will not admit horses or carriages.
 Know'st thou the way to Dover?
 —Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
FOOTPOST. n. f. [foot and post.] A post or messenger that travels on foot.
 For carrying such letters, every thoroughfare weekly appointeth a footpost, whose dispatch is well near as speedy as the horses.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
FOOTSTALL. n. f. [foot and stall.] A woman's stirrup.
FOOTSTEP. n. f. [foot and step.]
 1. Trace; track; impression left by the foot.
 Clear-sighted reason wisdom's judgments leads,
 And sense, her vassal, in her footsteps treads.
Denham.
 A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, wherever he has the footsteps of others to follow.
Locke.
 2. Token; mark; notice given.
 Let us turn our thoughts to the frame of our system, if there we may trace any visible footstep of Divine wisdom and beneficence. Bentley's Sermon.
 3. Example.
FOOTSTOOL. n. f. [foot and stool.] Stool on which he that sits places his feet.
 Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
 And made our footstool of security.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.
 They whose sacred office 'tis to bring Kings to obey their God, and men their king,
 By these mysterious links to fix and tie
 Men to the footstool of the Deity. Denham's Sophy.
 Let echoing anthems make his praises known
 On earth, his footstool, as in heaven his throne.
Rowcommen.
 By the phrase of worshipping his footstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his foot- stool. Stillingfleet.
FOP. n. f. [A word probably made by chance,
 and therefore without etymology.] A simpleton;
 a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, dress, and flutter; an impertinent.
 A whole tribe of fops,
 Got 'tween asleep and wake. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 When such a positive abandon'd fop,
 Among his numerous absurdities,
 Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
 I fret to see them in such company. Rowcommen.
 The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat. L'Estrange.
 In a dull stream, which moving flow,
 You hardly see the current flow;
 When

FOR

When a small breeze obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.
FO'POODLE. n. f. [fop and doodle.] A fool;
an insignificant wretch.

Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,
And handled you like a fopdoodle. Hudibras.
FO'PPERV. n. f. [from fop.]
1. Folly; impertinence.

Let not the found of shallow foppery enter
My sober house, Shakespeare's Merch. of Ven.
I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprize of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakespeare's Mer. Wives of Wind.

This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters, the fun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains on necessity. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.

3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in. Stillington.
But though we fetch from Italy and France
Our fopperies of tune, and modes of dance,
Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense. Grave.

I with I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift.

FO'PPISH. adj. [from fop.]
1. Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools ne'er had less grace in a year;
For wife men are grown foppish,
And know not how their wits to wear.
Their manners are so apish. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of drefs.

With him the present still some virtues have;
The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave;
The slothful negligent, the foppish neat;
The lewd are airy, and the fly discreet. Garth.

The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish; so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women. Arbutnot.

You would know who is rude and ill-natured, who is vain and foppish, who lives too high, and who is in debt. Law.

FO'PPISHLY. adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; oftentatiously.

FO'PPISHNESS. n. f. [from foppish.] Vanity;
showy or ostentatious vanity.

FO'PPING. n. f. [from fop.] A petty fop; an under-rate coxcomb.

They works in Chloe's toilet gain a part,
And, with his taylor, share the fopling's heart. Tickel.

FOR. prep. [fop, Saxon; voor, Dutch.]
1. Because of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his Son would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant. Hooker.

Edward and Richard
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
Are at our backs. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Speak, good Cominius;
Leave nothing out for length. Shakespeare.

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels. Raleigh's History.

An astrologer faith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment. Bacon.

FOR

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their laws; so the Christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention. Bacon's War with Spain.

The governour, fallying out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them. Knolles's History.

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victuals. Knolles.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,
This cannot take her:

If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her. Suckling.

Care not for frowns or smiles. Den. Sophy, Prol.
The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wicked for hoping. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him. Taylor.

Persons who have lost more of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them. Ray on the Creation.

I but revenge my fate; disdain'd, betray'd,
And fuff'ring death, for this ungrateful maid. Dryden.

Sole on the barren sands, the fuff'ring chief Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.

For his long absence church and state did groan,
Madness the pulpit, faction seized the throne. Dryden.

Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd
For what befalls at home, or what abroad. Dryden's Virgil.

I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;
For pity, aggravate my crime no more. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,
Shriek'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers. Locke.

A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little better for any thing else. Locke.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests. Addison.

My open'd thought to joyous prospect raise,
And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise. Prior.

Which best or worst you could not think;
And die you must for want of drink. Prior.

It is a most infamous scandal upon the nation, to reproach them for treating foreigners with contempt. Swift.

We can only give them that liberty now for something, which they have so many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us. Swift.

Your sermons will be less valuable, for want of time. Swift.

2. With respect to; with regard to.
Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out. Shakespeare's Coriol.

A paltry ring
That she did give me, whose poetry was,
For all the world like cutler's poetry
Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not. Shakespeare.

For all the world,
As thou art at this hour, was Richard then. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters. Bacon's Essays.

Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps,

FOR

youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politick. Bacon's Essays.

Comets are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour, produceth what kind of effects. Bacon's Essays.

For me, if there be such a thing as I. Waller.

He faith these honours consisted in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it. Stillington.

Our laws were for their matter foreign. Hales.

Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; there being no other laws in China but the king's command. Temple.

For me no other happiness I own,
Than to have born no issue to the throne. Dryden's Tyrant Love.

For me, my stormy voyage at an end,
I to the port of death securely tend. Dryd. En.

After death, we sprights have just natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures. Dryden.

Such little wasps, and yet so full of spite;
For bulk mere insects, yet in mischief strong. Tate's Juvenal.

Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the sense in general; but for particulars and circumstances, he continually lops them. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

Lo, some are vellow, and the rest as good,
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood. Pope.

3. In this sense it has often as before it.
As for Maronaldus the general, they had no just cause to dislike him, being an old captain of great experience. Knolles.

4. In the character of.
If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.

She thinks you favour'd:
But let her go, for an ungrateful woman. A. Philips.

Say, is it fitting, in this very field.
This field, where from my youth I've been a carter, Gay.

I, in this field, should die for a deserter? Gay.

5. With resemblance of.
I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,
The gentle York is up. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Now, now for sure, deliverance is at hand,
The kingdom shall to Israel be restor'd. Milton.

The startling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
And, bounding o'er the pommel cast the knight;
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead. Dryden.

6. Considered as; in the place of.
Our present lot appears
For happy, though but ill; for ill, not worst,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe. Milton.

The council-table and star-chamber held for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited. Clarendon.

7. In advantage of; for the sake of.
An ant is a wife creature for itself; but it is a shrewd thing in an orchard. Bacon.

He refused not to die for those that killed him, and shed his blood for some of those that spilt it. Boyle.

Shall I think the world was made for one,
And men are born for kings, as beasts for men,
Not for protection, but to be devoured? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Read all the prefaces of Dryden,
For those our critics much confide in;
Though merely writ at first for filling,
To raise the volume's price a shilling. Swift.

8. Conducive to; beneficial to.
It is for the general good of human society, and consequently of particular persons, to be true and just; and it is for men's health to be temperate. Tillotson.

It can never be for the interest of a believer to do me a mischief, because he is sure, upon the balance

balance of accounts, to find himself a loser by it.

Addison's Spectator.

9. With intention of going to a certain place.
We failed from Peru for China and Japan. Eac.
As she was brought for England, she was cast away near Harwich haven.

We failed directly for Genoa, and had a fair wind. Addison.

10. In comparative respect.

For turks with Indian elephants he strove,
And Jove's own thunder from his mouth he drove. Dryden.

11. With appropriation to.

Shadow will serve for summer: prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster-book. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

12. After O an expression of desire.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!

Shakespeare's Henry V. Prologue.

13. In account of; in relation of.

Thus much for the beginning and progress of the deluge. Barnes's Theory of the Earth.

14. Inducing to as a motive.

There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice. Addison.

15. In expectation of.

He must be back again by one and twenty, to marry and propagate: the father cannot stay any longer for the portion, nor the mother for a new set of babies to play with. Locke.

16. Noting power or possibility.

For a holy person to be humble, for one whom all men esteem a saint, to fear lest himself become a devil, is as hard as for a prince to submit himself to be guided by tutors. Taylor.

17. Noting dependence.

The colours of outward objects, brought into a darkened room, depend for their visibility upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by. Boyle on Colours.

18. In prevention of; for fear of.

Corn being had down, any way ye allow,
Should wither as needeth for burning in mow. Tusser.

And, for the time shall not seem tedious,

I'll tell thee what befel me on a day,
In this fair place. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

There must be no alleys with hedges at the higher end, for letting your prospect upon this fair hedge from the green: nor at the farther end, for letting your prospect from the hedge through the arches upon the heath. Bacon's Essays.

She wrapped him close for catching cold. Lovelace.

19. In remedy of.

Sometimes hot, sometimes cold things are good for the toothach. Garrison.

20. In exchange of.

He made considerable progress in the study of the law, before he quitted that profession for this of poetry. Dryden.

21. In the place of; instead of.

To make him copious is to alter his character; and to translate him line for line is impossible. Dryden.

We take a falling meteor for a star. Cowley.

22. In supply of; to serve in the place of.

Most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet for their model, adore him, and imitate him, as they think, without knowing wherein he is defective. Dryden.

23. Through a certain duration.

Some please for once, some will for ever please. Johnson.

Those who sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy, without their knowing it. Locke.

The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Since, hir'd for life, thy servile muse must sing
Successive conquests, and a glorious king;
And bring him laurels, whatsoever they cost. Prior.

The youth transported, asks without delay

To guide the sun's bright chariot for a day. Garr's Ovid.

24. In search of; in quest of.

Philosophers have run so far back for arguments of comfort against pain, as to doubt whether there were any such thing; and yet, for all that, when any great evil has been upon them, they would cry out as loud as other men. Tillotson.

25. According to.

Chymists have not been able, for aught is vulgarly known, by fire alone to separate true sulphur from antimony. Boyle.

26. Noting a state of fitness or readiness.

Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you. Shakespeare.

If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke. Dryden.

27. In hope of; for the sake of; noting the final cause.

How quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!

For this the foolish, over-careful fathers,
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their

* brains with care,

Their bones with industry: for this, engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold:

For this they have been thoughtful to invest Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The kingdom of God was first rent by ill counsel; upon which counsel there are set, for our instruction, two marks. Bacon.

Whether some hero's fate,
In words worth dying for, he celebrate. Cowley.

For he writes not for money, nor for praise,
Nor to be call'd a wit, nor to wear bays. Denham.

There we shall see, a fight worthy dying for,
That blessed Saviour, who so highly deserves of us. Boyle.

He is not disposed to be a fool, and to be miserable for company. Tillotson.

Even death's become to me no dreadful name;
In fighting fields, where our acquaintance grew,
I saw him, and condemn'd him first for you. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

For this, 'tis needful to prevent her art,
And fire with love the proud Phœnician's heart. Dryden's Virgil.

Some pray for riches; riches they obtain;
But watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain. Dryden.

Let them, who truly would appear my friends,
Employ their swords like mine for noble ends. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

28. Of tendency to; towards.

The kettle to the top was hoist;
But with its upside down, to throw
Its inclination for below. Swift.

29. In favour of; on the part of; on the side of.

Ye suppose the laws for which ye strive are found in Scripture; but those not against which we strive. Hooker, Preface.

It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have so often drawn it for a good one. Dryden.

Jove was for Venus; but he fear'd his wife. Dryden.

He for the world was made, not us alone. Cowley.

They must be void of all zeal for God's honour, who do not with sighs and tears intercede with him. Smalbridge.

Aristotle is for poetical justice. Dennis.

They are all for rank and foul feeding. Felton.

30. Noting accommodation or adaptation.

Fortune, if there be such a thing as she,
Spies that I bear so well her tyranny,
That she thinks nothing else so fit for me. Dennis.

A few rules of logic are thought sufficient, in this case, for those who pretend to the highest improvement. Locke.

It is for wicked men to dread God; but a virtuous man may have undisturbed thoughts, even of the justice of God. Tillotson.

His country has good havens, both for the Adriatick and Mediterranean. Addison on Italy.

Perfia is commodiously situated for trade both by sea and land. Arbutnot on Coins.

Scholars are frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use. Felton.

31. With intention of.

And by that justice hast remov'd the cause
Of those rude tempests, which, for rapine sent Too oft, alas, involv'd the innocent. Waller.

Here huntmen with delight may read
How to chuse dogs for scent or speed. Waller.

God hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of. Tillotson's Sermons.

For this, from Trivia's temple and her wood,
Are couriers driv'n, who fined their masters blood. Dryden.

Such examples should be set before them, as patterns for their daily imitation. Locke.

The next question usually is, what is it for? Locke.

Achilles is for revenging himself upon Agamemnon, by means of Hector. Broom's View of Epick Poem.

32. Becoming; belonging to.

It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts. Shakespeare's Othello.

Th' offers he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take. Daniel.

It were more for his honour to raise his siege, than to spend so many good men in the winning of it by force. Knollys.

Jefts for Dutchmen and English boys. Cowley.

Is it for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command! Dryden's Virgil's Æneid.

This fire already signs him for the skies,
And marks the seat amidst the deities. Dryden's Æneid.

It is a reasonable account for any man to give, why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do, and perish with them. Tillotson.

33. Notwithstanding.

This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philojudæus expresseth. Hooker.

God's desertion shall, for ought he knows, the next minute supervene. Decay of Piety.

Probability supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing yet certainly determined on either side. South.

For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us. Swift's Drapier's Letters.

If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system. Bentley.

34. To the use of; to be used in.

The oak for nothing ill,
The osier good for twigs, the poplar for the mill. Spenser.

Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason. Tillotson.

35. In consequence of.

For love they force through thickets of the wood,
They climb the steepy hills and stem the flood. Dryden.

36. In recompence of; in return of.

Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Cæsar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryden's Persius.

First the wily wizard must be caught;
For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught. Dryden's Virgil.

37. In proportion to.

He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall. Shakespeare.

As he could see clear, for those times, through superstition superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy. Bacon's Henry VII.

Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!

Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;

Too noble for revenge. Dryden's Juvenal.

38. By means of; by interposition of.

Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God? Tillotson.

39. In regard of; in preservation of. I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;

But could not get him for my heart. Shakespeare.

I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls. Addison's Spectator.

40. For all. Notwithstanding.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprize. Sidney.

For all the carefulness of the Christians the English bulwark was undetermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up. Knolly's History.

But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more, Did shew the footing found for all the flood. Davies.

They resolute, for all this, do proceed Unto that judgment. Daniel.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home. Stillingfleet.

Though that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will, for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account. Boyle on Colours.

She might have pass'd over such business; but my rabble is not to be mumbled up in silence, for all her pertness. Dryden.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition. South.

41. For to. In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to, the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause. As, I come for to see you, for I love to see you: in the same sense with the French pour. Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.

Who shall let me now On this vile body for to wreak my wrong? Fairy Queen.

A large posterity

Up to your happy palaces may mount, Of blessed saints for to increase the count. Spenser.

These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain. Bacon.

For. conj.

1. The word by which the reason is introduced of something advanced before.

Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal, Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike As if we had them not.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know, Who for another year dig, plow, and sow; For never any man was yet so old, But hop'd his life one Winter more would hold. Denham.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit?

For the first matter loves variety less. Conway.

Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God. Tillotson.

2. Because; on this account that. It is in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser on Ireland.

Jealous souls will not be answer'd so:

They are not ever jealous for a cause,

But jealous for they're jealous. Shakespeare's Othello.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think

I will your serious and great business scant;

For she is with me. Shakespeare's Othello.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,

That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;

But, for his great Creator would the fame,

His will increas'd; to fire augmenteth flame. Fairfax.

Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon's Natural History.

3. For as much. In regard to that; in consideration of.

For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest over-quick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water. Arbutnot on Diet.

4. For why. Because; for this reason that.

Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him. Knollys.

tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters.

Derham.

FORD. n. f. [Pope, Saxon, from fapan, to pass.]

1. A shallow part of a river where it may be passed without swimming.

Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;

They pass'd the stream, when she had found the ford.

Fairfax.

2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards

The ford, and of itself the water flies

All taste of living wight.

Milton's Par. Lost.

Rife, wretched widow! rife; nor undeplor'd Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford:

But rife, prepar'd in black to mourn thy pe-rill'd lord.

Dryden.

To FORD, v. a. [from the noun.] To pass without swimming.

Adam's shin-bones must have contained a thou-

Following with ease: if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state.

Dryden.

Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend
By course of time to their appointed end.

Dryden.

Here Britain's statesmen off the fall foredoom'd
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home.

Pope.

FORE-END. n. f. [fore and end.] The anterior part.

Vol. I. N^o. 18. 4 S. I have

FOR

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven than in all
The fore-end of my time. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm.

FOREFA'THER. n. s. [fore and father.] Ancestor;
one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge. Hooker.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor. Raleigh's History.

Conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief; mine is not so.
Shakespeare's Richard II.

Shall I not be distraught,
And maply play with my forefathers joints?
Shakespeare.

Our great forefathers
Had left him nought to conquer but his country.
Addison.

When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way. Addison on Italy.

Blest peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace
Reflecting, and reflected in his race. Pope.

To FOREFEND. v. a. [It is doubtful whether from fore or for and defend. If from fore, it implies antecedent provision; as forearm: if from for prohibitory security; as forbid. Of the two following examples one favours for, and the other fore.]

1. To prohibit; to avert.
I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heav'n's forefend! I would not kill thy soul.
Shakespeare.

Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefend,
May bring your youth to some untimely end.
Dryden.

2. To provide for; to secure.
Down with the nose,
Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away
Of him, that, his particular to forefend,
Smells from the gen'ral weal.

FOREFINGER. n. s. [fore and finger.] The finger next to the thumb; the index.

An agate-stone
On the forefinger of an alderman.

Polymnia shall be drawn, as it were, acting her speech with her forefinger. Peasam on Drawing.

cient Gauls and Britons; and some upon the forefinger. Brown.

FOREFOOT. n. s. plur. forefeet. [fore and foot.]
The anterior foot of a quadruped: in contempt, a hand.

Give me thy fist, thy forefoot to me give.

He ran fiercely, and smote at Heliodorus with his forefeet. Mac. iii. 25.

I continue my line from thence to the heel;
then making the breast with the eminency thereof,
bring out his near forefeet, which I finish.

To FOREGO. v. a. [fore and go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.
Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humbled foe?

If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither forgiven nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them.

He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard assay foregone;

And now hath vowed, 'till he avenged be
Of that despite, never to wearen none.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master? Shakesp.
Let us not forego

That for a trifle which was bought with blood.
Shakespeare.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forlorn!
Milton.

This argument might prevail with you to forego
a little of your repose for the publick benefit.
Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should forego a present enjoyment.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]
By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not. Shakespeare.

It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone, and when his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Reflect upon the two foregoing objections.
Boyle on Colours.

This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitation pleases. Dryden's DuRoi.

I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations. Addison.

In the foregoing part of this work I promised proofs. Woodward.

3. To lose.
This is the very ecstasy of love,
Whose violent property foregoes itself,
And leads the will to desperate undertakings.

FOREGOER. n. s. [from forego.] Ancestor;
progenitor.

Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive Than our foregoers. Shak. All's well that ends well.

FOREGROUND. n. s. [fore and ground.] The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can subsist on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed in an open field. Dryden.

FOREHAND. n. s. [fore and hand.]

1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.

2. The chief part. Not in use.
The great Achilles whom opinion crowns
The sinew and the forehand of our host. Shakesp.

FOREHAND. adj. A thing done sooner than is regular.

You'll say she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the forehand sin. Shakespeare.

FOREHAND. n. s. [from fore and hand.]

1. Early; timely.
If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forehand care, yet be sure,
by a timely diligence, to redeem the time.

2. Formed in foreparts.
He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely fore-banded; mark but the cleanness of his shapes too.
Dryden.

FOREHEAD. n. s. [fore and head.]

1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian frowns contending. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And mold'd ev'ry feature from my face;

FOR

Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity. The forehead is the part on which shame visibly operates.

A man of confidence preffeth forward upon every appearance of advantage; where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence:
these men of forehead are magnificent in promises,
and infallible in their prescriptions. Collier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply.

FOREHOLDING. n. s. [fore and hold.] Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.

How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits with the fancy of omens, forebodings, and old wives tales! L'Estrange.

FOREIGN. adj. [forain, Fr. forano, Sp. fora, foris, Lat.]

1. Not of this country; not domestick.
Your son, that with a fearful foul Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall come home.

The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts. Milton.

The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domestick and foreign writers.

The parties and divisions amongst us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart.

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition. Addison.

This design is not foreign from some people's thoughts. Swift.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.
They will not stick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous, Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him,

That he ran mad and died. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum forinsecum;
as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.
There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold in their ill-natur'd land Induce. Philips.

FOREIGNER. n. s. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham's Sophy.

To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong a friend, a kinsman, and a son.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch; but the lemons, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmeg are all foreigners.

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects. Swift.

FOREIGNNESS. n. s. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right. Locke.

To FOREIMAGINE. v. a. [fore and imagine.] To conceive or fancy before proof.

We are within compass of a foreimagined possibility in that behalf. Gamelin's Remains.

TO FOREJUDGE. v. a. [fore and judge.] To judge beforehand; to be prepossessed; to pre-judge.

TO FOREKNOW. v. a. [fore and know.] To have prescience of; to foresee.

We foreknow that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after Winter the Spring shall come; after Spring, Summer and Harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those.

He foreknew John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave with peace.

Calchas the sacred seer, who had in view Things present and the past, and things to come

Who would the miseries of man foreknow? Not knowing, we but share our part of woe.

FOREKNOWABLE. adj. [from foreknow.] Possible to be known before they happen.

It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances.

FOREKNOWLEDGE. n. s. [fore and knowledge.] Prescience; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge, saveth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world.

I told him you was asleep: he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore chafes to speak with you.

If I foreknew, Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault, Which had no less prov'd certain foreknown.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason that you do not dislike my letters.

FORELAND. n. s. [fore and land.] A promontory; headland; high land jutting into the sea; a cape.

As when a ship, by skilful steersman wrought, Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sails.

TO FORELAY. v. a. [fore and lay.] 1. To lay wait for; to intrap by ambush.

A serpent shoots his sting at unawares; An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller: The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake, One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake.

2. To contrive antecedently. TO FORELIFT. v. a. [fore and lift.] To raise aloft any anterior part.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass, Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast; And often bounding on the bruised grass,

As for great joy of his new comen guest. FORELOCK. n. s. [fore and lock.] The hair that grows from the forehead of the head.

Tell her the joyous time will not be staid, Unless she do him by the forelock take.

Hayacinthine locks Round from his parted forelock manly hung, Clust'ring, but not beneath his shoulders broad.

Zeal and duty are not slow, But on occasion's forelock watchful wait.

Time is painted with a lock before, and bald behind, signifying thereby that we must take time by the forelock; for, when it is once past, there is no recalling it.

FOREMAN. n. s. [fore and man.] The first or chief person.

He is a very sensible man, shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury.

FOREMENTIONED. adj. [fore and mentioned.] Mentioned or recited before. It is observable that many participles are compounded with fore, whose verbs have no such composition.

Dacier, in the life of Aurelius, has not taken notice of the forementioned figure on the pillar.

FOREMOST. adj. [from fore.] 1. First in place.

All three were set among the foremost ranks of fame, for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt.

Our women in the foremost ranks appear; March to the fight, and meet your mistress there.

The bold Sempronius, That still broke foremost through the crowd of patriots,

As with a hurricane of zeal transported, And virtuous even to madness.

2. First in dignity. These ride foremost in the field, As they the foremost rank of honour held.

FORENAMED. adj. [fore and name.] Nominated before.

And such are sure ones, As Curius and the forenamed Lentulus,

FORENOON. n. s. [fore and noon.] The time of day reckoned from the middle point, between the dawn and the meridian, to the meridian: opposed to afternoon.

The manner was, that the forenoon they should run at tilt, the afternoon in a broad field in manner of a battle, 'till either the strangers or the country knights won the field.

Curio, at the funeral of his father, built a temporary theatre, consisting of two parts turning on hinges, according to the position of the sun, for the convenience of forenoon's, and afternoon's diversion.

FORENOTICE. n. s. [fore and notice.] Information of an event before it happens.

So strange a revolution never happens in poetry, but either heaven or earth gives some forenotice of it.

FORENSICK. adj. [forensis, Latin.] Belonging to courts of judicature.

Perfon is a forensick term, appropriating actions and their merit; and so belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery. This personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness.

The forum was a publick place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judges in matters of property, or in criminal cases: thence all sorts of disputations in courts of justice, where several persons make their distinct speeches, may come under the name of forensick disputes.

TO FOREORDAIN. v. a. [fore and ordain.] To predestinate; to predetermine; to preordain.

The church can discharge, in manner convenient, a work of so great importance, by foreordaining some short collect wherein briefly to mention thanks.

FOREPART. n. s. [fore and part.] 1. The part first in time.

Had it been so raised, it would deprive us of the sun's light all the forepart of the day.

2. To place anterior in place. The ribs have no cavity in them, and towards the forepart or breast are broad and thin, to bend and give way without danger of fracture.

FOREPAST. adj. [fore and past.] Past before a certain time.

Now cease, ye damsels, your delights forepast; Enough it is that all the day is your's.

My forepast proofs, howe'er the matter fall, Shall tax my fears of little vanity,

Having vainly fear'd too little. Such is the treaty which he negotiates with us, an offer and tender of a reconciliation, an act of oblivion, of all forepast sins, and of a new covenant.

FOREPOSSESSED. adj. [fore and possess.] Pre-occupied; pre-possessed; pre-engaged.

The testimony of either of the ancient fathers, or of other official divines, may be clearly and abundantly answered, to the satisfaction of any rational man, not extremely forepossessed with prejudice.

FORERANK. n. s. [fore and rank.] First rank; front.

Yet leave our cousin Catherine here with us; She is our capital demand, compriz'd Within the forerank of our articles.

FORERECITED. adj. [fore and recite.] Mentioned or enumerated before.

Bid him recount The forerected practices, whereof We cannot feel too little, hear too much.

TO FORERUN. v. a. [fore and run.] 1. To come before as an earnest of something following; to introduce as an harbinger.

Against ill chances men are ever merry; But heaviness foreruns the good event.

The sun Was set, and twilight from the East came on, Forerunning night.

She bids me hope: oh heav'n, she pities me! And pity still forerun approaching love, As lightning does the thunder.

2. To precede; to have the start of.

I heard it to be a maxim at Dublin, to follow, if not forerun, all that is or will be practised in London.

FORERUNNER. n. s. [from forerun.] 1. An harbinger; a messenger sent before to give notice of those that follow.

The six strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a seventh, the prince of Morocco.

A cock was sacrificed as the forerunner of day and the sun, thereby acknowledging the light of life to be derived from the divine bounty, the daughter of Providence.

My elder brothers, my forerunners came, Rough draughts of nature, ill design'd, and lame: Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear; 'Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care.

2. A prognostick; a sign foretelling any thing.

O Eve! some further change awaits us nigh, Which heav'n, by these mute signs in nature, shews

Forerunners of his purpose. Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the forerunner of death.

The keeping insensible perspiration up in due measure is the cause as well as sign of health, and the least deviation from that due quantity, the certain forerunner of a disease.

Already Opera prepares the way, The sure forerunner of her gentle sway.

TO FORESA'Y. v. a. [fore and say.] To predict; to prophesy; to foretell.

What else is the law but the gospel foreshowed? What other the gospel than the law fulfilled? Hooker.

FORESIGHT. n. f. [fore and sight.]

1. Prescience; prognostication; foreknowledge. The accent anciently on the last syllable.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes, Here sleep below; while thou to foresight wak'st; As once thou sleep'st, while she to life was form'd. Milton.

2. Provident care of futurity.

He had a sharp foresight, and working wit, That never idle was, ne once could rest a whit. Spenser.

In matters of arms he was both skilful and industrious, and as well in foresight as resolution present and great. Hayward.

Difficulties and temptations will more easily be born or avoided, if with prudent foresight we arm ourselves against them. Rogers.

FORESIGHTFUL. adj. [foresight and full.] Present; provident.

Death gave him no such pangs as the foresightful care he had of his silly successor. Sidney.

To FORESIGNIFY. v. a. [fore and signify.] To betoken beforehand; to foreshow; to typify.

Discoveries of Christ already present, whose future coming the Psalms did but foresignify. Hooker.

Yet as being past time noxious, where they light

On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent, They oft foresignify, and threaten ill. Milton's Paradise Regained.

FORESKIN. n. f. [fore and skin.] The prepuce. Their own hand

An hundred of the faithless foe shall slay, And for a dow'r their hundred foreskin pay, Be Michol thy reward. Corneley's Davidis.

FORESKIRT. n. f. [fore and skirt.] The pendulous or loose part of the coat before.

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect! No other obligation?

That promises more thousands: honour's train Is longer than his foreskin. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

To FORESLACK. v. a. [fore and slack.] To neglect by idleness.

It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion foreslack-ed, that might have been the eternal good of the land. Spenser's State of Ireland.

To FORESLOW. v. a. [fore and slow.]

1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct. No stream, no wood, no mountain could foreslow

Their hasty pace. Tai-fu.

Now the illustrious nymph return'd again, Brings every grace triumphant in her train:

The wand'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,

Forflow'd her passage to behold her form. Dryden.

2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assail them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Our good purposes foreslowed are become our tormentors upon our death-bed. Bishop Hall.

Chremes, how many fishers do you know That rule their boats and use their nets aright,

That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreslow? Some such have been: but, ah! by tempests spite Their boats are lost; while they may sit and moan That few were such, and now these few are none. P. Fletcher.

To FORESLOW. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter. This may plant courage in their quailing breasts, For yet is hope of life and victory:

Forflow no longer, make me hence amain. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

You shall find his vanities forespent, Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shakespeare's Henry V.

3. Bestowed before. We must receive him

According to the honour of his sender; And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us, We must extend our notice. Shakespeare.

FORESPU'RRER. n. f. [fore and spur.] One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet, To show how costly Summer was at hand, As this forespurrier comes before his lord. Shakespeare.

FOREST. n. f. [forst, French; forestry, Ital.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunfinane's high hill Shall come against him.

—That will never be: Who can impreis the forest, bid the tree Unfix his earth-bound root. Shakespeare's Macb.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champaigns, but grazing, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests. Bacon's Natural History.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head. Rescommon.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure. The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to eforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The property of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agistors, regards, bailiffs, and headles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pypowders to a fair. Cowell.

To FORESTALL. v. a. [fore-tallan, Saxon.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand. If thou be master-gunner, spend not all That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it, And give men turns of speech: do not forefall By lavishness thine own and others wit, As if thou mad'st thy will. Herbert.

What need a man forefall his date of grief, And run to meet what he would most avoid. Milt.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention. And through good luck prolonged hath thy date, Yet death then would the like mishap forefall. Fairy Queen.

What's in prayer, but this twofold force To be forefallen ere we come to fall, Or pardon'd being down. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But for my tears, I had forefall'd this dear and deep rebuke, Ere you with grief had spoke. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

If thou covest death, as utmost end Of misery, so thinking to evade The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so To be forefall'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I will not forefall your judgment of the rest. Pope.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price. He bold spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be, Abandon this forefallen place at erit, For fear of further harm, I counsel thee. Fairy Queen.

4. To deprive by something prior: with of, Not in use. May This night forefall him of the coming day. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FORESTALLER. n. f. [from forefall.] One that anticipates the market; one that purchases before others to raise the price.

Commodities, good or bad, the workman must take at his master's rate, or sit still and starve; whilst, by this means, this new sort of ingrossers or forefallers having the feeling and supplying this numerous body of workmen, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

FORETAST. n. f.

FOR

FORETASTE. n. f. Anticipation of.

A pleasure that a man may call as properly his own as his soul and his conscience, neither liable to accident, nor exposed to injury: it is the foretaste of heaven, and the earnest of eternity. South.

To FORETELL. v. a. prater, and part. pass. foretold. [fore and tell.]

1. To predict; to prophesy.

What art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

I found

The new-created world, which came in heaven
Long had foretold. Milton.

Mercia's king,

Warn'd in a dream, his murder did foretell,
From point to point, as after it befell. Dryden.

When great Ulysses fought the Phrygian shores,
Deeds then undone my faithful tongue foretold; Heav'n seal'd my words, and you those deeds behold. Pope.

follow after, have likewise foretold of these days.

Acts, iii. 24.

FORETELLER. n. f. [from foretell.] Predictor; foreshewer.

Others are proposed, not that the foretold events should be known; but that the accomplishment that expounds them may evince, that the foreteller of them was able to foresee thee. Boyle on Colours.

To FORETHINK. v. a. [fore and think.]

To anticipate in the mind; to have prescience of.

The soul of every man

Prophetically does forethink thy fall. Shak. Hen. IV.

I do pray to thee,

Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom Forethought by heav'n. Shakespeare's King John.

Adam could not be ignorant of the punishments due to neglect and disobedience; and felt, by the proof thereof, in himself another terror than he had forethought, or could imagine.

Raleigh's History of the World.

Friday, the fatal day! when next it came,
Her foul forethought the fiend would change his game. Dryden.

2. To contrive antecedently.

Blessed be that God which hath given you an heart to forethink this, and a will to honour him with his own. Bishop Hall.

To FORETHINK. v. n. To contrive beforehand.

What's my frenzy will be call'd my crime:
What then is thine? Thou cool deliberate villain!
Thou wife, forethinking, weighing politician!

Smith.

FORETHOUGHT. n. f. [from forethink.]

1. Prescience; anticipation.

He that is undone, is equally undone, whether it be by spitefulness of forethought, or by the folly of oversight, or evil counsel. L'Estrange.

2. Provident care.

To FORETOKEN. v. a. [fore and token.] To foreshow; to prognosticate as a sign.

The king from Ireland hastes; but did no good;
Whilst strange prodigious signs foretolden blood.

Daniel.

FORETOKEN. n. f. [from the verb.] Preventive sign; prognostick.

It may prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune. Sidney.

They mislaid nothing more in king Edward the Confessor, than that he was Frenchified, and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in of foreign powers, which indeed happened. Cowden's Remains.

FORETOOTH. n. f. [fore and tooth.] The tooth in the anterior part of the mouth; the incisor.

The foretooth should be formed broad, and with a thin sharp edge like chizzles. Ray on the Creation.

FORETOP. n. f. [fore and top.] That part of a woman's head-dress that is forward, or the top of a periwig.

So may your hats your foretops never press,
Untouch'd your ribbons, sacred be your drefs.

Dryden.

FOR

FOREVOUCHED. part. [fore and vouch.] Affirmed before; formerly told.

Sure her offence

Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it; or your forevouch'd affection

Fall'n into taint. Shakespeare's King Lear.

FOREWARD. n. f. [fore and ward.] The van;
the front.

They that marched in the foreward were all mighty men. 1 Mac. ix. ii.

To FOREWARN. v. a. [fore and warn.]

1. To admonish beforehand.

I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell. Luke, xii. 5.

2. To form previously of any future event.

Divine interpreter, by favour sent Down from the empyrean, to forewarn
Us timely of what might else have been our loss

Unknown. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To caution against any thing beforehand.

Well I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Thy pride,

And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
Rejected my forewarning, and disdain'd
Not to be trusted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Thou Phœbus had forewarned him of finging wars,
yet the search of nature was free.

Dryden's Virgil, Dedication.

Young Chæbus, who by love was led
To win renown and fair Callandra's bed,
Had lately brought his troops to Priam's aid;
Forewarn'd in vain by the prophetic maid.

Dryden's Æneid.

To FOREWASTE. v. a. [fore and waste.] To defolate; to destroy. Out of use.

Vespasian, with great spoil and rage,
Forewasted all, until Gemissa gent

Perfused him to cease. Fairy Queen.

High time 'gan it wax for Una fair,
To think of those her captive parents dear,
And their forewasted kingdom to repair.

To FOREWEARY. v. a. [for and wary.] To dispirit with labour.

By your toil

And labour long, through which ye hither came,
Ye both forewary'd be: therefore a while
I read you rest, and to your bowers recoil.

Fairy Queen.

To FOREWISH. v. a. [fore and wish.] To desire beforehand.

The wifer sort ceased not to do what in them lay,
to procure that the good commonly forewished might in time come to effect.

Knolly's History of the Turks.

FOREWORN. part. [fore and worn, from wear.]

Worn out; wasted by time or use.

Neither the light was enough to read the words, and the ink was already foreworn, and in many places blotted. Sidney.

FORFEIT. n. f. [forfeit, French; forfied, Welsh.]

1. Something lost by the commission of a crime; something paid for expiation of a crime; a fine;
a mulct.

Thy flanders I forgive, and therewithal Remit thy other forfeits. Shakes. Meas. for Measure.

Th' execution leave to high disposal,
And let another hand, not thine, exact
Thy penal forfeit from thyself. Milton's Agonistes.

Thy life, Melantius! I am come to take,
Of which foul treason does a forfeit make. Waller.

2. A person obnoxious to punishment; one whose life is forfeited by his offence. Now obsolete.

Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

To FORFEIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To lose by some breach of condition; to lose by some offence.

FOR

If then a man, on light conditions, gain
A great estate to him, and his, for ever;

If wilfully he forfeit it again,
Who doth bemoan his heir, or blame the giver?

Davies.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeit
all right to happiness. Boyle.

A father cannot alien the power he has over his child: he may perhaps to some degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer it. Locke.

FORFEIT. participial adj. [from the verb.] Liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime; lost either as to the right or possession, by breach of conditions.

All the souls that are, were forfeit once;
And he that might the vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy. Shakes. Meas. for Measure.

Beg that thou may'st have leave to hang thyself;
And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord. Shakespeare.

This now fenceless world,
Forfeit to death. Milton.

Straight all his hopes exhal'd in empty smoke,
And his long toils were forfeit for a look.

Dryden's Virgil.

Methought with wond'rous ease he swallowed down

His forfeit honour, to betray the town.

Dryden's Indian Emperor.

How the murd'rer paid his forfeit breath;
What lands so distant from that scene of death,
But trembling heard the fame! Pope's Odyssey.

FORFEITABLE. adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.

FORFEITURE. n. f. [forfeiture, French; from forfeit.]

1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.

2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.

The court is as well a Chancery to save and debar forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if Imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Bacon's War with Spain.

Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

He fairly abdicates his throne,
He has a forfeiture incur'd. Swift.

FORGAVE. The preterite of forgive.

FORGE. n. f. [forge, French.]

1. The place where iron is beaten into form.
In common we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.

Now behold,
In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

In other part stood one, who at the forge
Labouring, two massy clods of iron and bras
Had melted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Th' Æolian forge exhausted of its fires.

Pope's Statius.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.

From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hucker.

3. Manufacture of metalline bodies; the act of working.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious and obedient to the stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, and moulded. Bacon.

To FORGE. v. a. [forger, old French.]

1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.

The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg'd of gold,

Must needs have golden furniture.

Chapman's Iliad.

Tyger with tyger, bear with bear you'll find
In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;

Bos.

But lawless man the anvil dares profane,
And forge that steel by which a man is slain,
Which earth at first for plough-shares did afford,
Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword.

Tate's Juvenal.

2. To make by any means.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
'Till he had forg'd himself a name i' th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

His heart's his mouth:
What his breath fo ges, that his tongue must vent.

Shakespeare.

Those names that the schools for ged, and put into the mouths of scholars, could never get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of public approbation. Locke.

3. To counterfeit; to falsify.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands:
For my more having would be but as fauce
To make me hunger more, that I should for ge Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal, Destroying them for wealth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FORGER. n. f. [from for ge.]

1. One who makes or forms.

2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.

As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer for gers of libels. Government of the Tongue.

No for ger of lies willingly and wittingly furnishes out the means of his own detection.

West on the Resurrection.

FORGERY. n. f. [from for ge.] The crime of falsification.

Has your king married the lady Gray?
And now, to sooth your for gery and his,
Sends me a paper to persuade me patience.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts, had they been false, to have shewn their falshood, and to have convicted them of for gery. Stephens's Sermons.

A for gery in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books sold under a false name are so many for geries. Swift.

2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the for ge.

He ran on embattled armies clad in iron,
And weaponless himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the for gery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail Adamantine proof. Milton's Agonistes.

TO FORGET. v. a. preter. for got; part. for gotten, or for got. [pongyzan, Saxon; vergeten, Dut.]

1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.

That is not for get
Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him.

Shakespeare's Richard II.

When I am for gotten, as I shall be,
A sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard. Shaks. Henry VIII.
For get not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches. Eccles. xxxvii. 6.

No sooner was our deliverance completed, but we for get our danger and our duty. Atterbury.

Alive, ridiculous; and dead, for got. Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman for get her sucking child? Yea, they may for get; yet will I not for get thee.

Isaiah, xlix. 5.

If we might for get ourselves, or for get God; if we might disregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing, at every time, and at every place.

Law.

The mass of mean for gotten things, FORGETFUL. adj. [from for get.]

Anon.

1. Not retaining the memory of.

2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their punishments and penance last,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood,
In large for getful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours, and their irksome years.

Dryden's Æneid.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.
Be not for getful to entertain strangers.

Hebrews, xiii. 2.

The queen is comfortless, and we for getful
In our long absence. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Have you not love enough to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,

Makes me for getful? Shakespeare's Jul. Cæsar.

I, in fact, a real interest have,
Which to my own advantage I would save;
And, with the usual courtier's trick, intend

To serve myself, for getful of my friend. Prior.

FORGETFULNESS. n. f. [from for getful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!

Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in for getfulness!

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep steals away

The wild desires of men and toils of day;
And brings, descending through the silent air,
A sweet for getfulness of human care. Pope's Statius.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with for getfulness of her duty. Hooker.

FORGETIVE. adj. [from for ge.] That may for ge or produce. A word, I believe, peculiar to Shakespeare.

Good herrie sack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish, dull vapours, makes it apprehensive, quick, for getive, full of nimble shapes, which, delivered to the voice, becomes excellent wit. Shakespeare.

FORGETTER. n. f. [from for get.]

1. One that forgets.

2. A careless person.

TO FORGIVE. v. a. [pongyzan, Saxon.]

1. To pardon a person; to not to punish.

Then heaven for give him too! Shaks. Macbeth.

I do beseech your grace for charity;
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now for give me frankly.

—Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free for give you,
As I would be for given: I for give all.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Slowly provok'd, she easily for gives. Prior.

2. To pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein shall be for given their iniquity. Isaiah, xxxiii. 24.

If prayers
Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard,
That on my head all might be visit'd,
Thy frailty and infirm sex for given,
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milton.

3. To remit; to not to exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and for gave him the debt.

Matthew, xviii. 27.

FORGIVENESS. n. f. [pongyzenurte, Saxon.]

1. The act of forgiving.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and for-givenness. Daniel.

2. Pardon of an offender.

Thou hast promised repentance and for givenness to them that have sinned against thee.

Prayer of Manasseb.

Exchange for givenness with me, noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's death come not upon thee,
Nor thine on me. Shakespeare.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong.

Dryden.

3. Pardon of an offence.

God has certainly promised for givenness of sin to every one who repents. South.

4. Tenderness; willingness to pardon.

Here are introduced more heroic principles of meekness, for givenness, bounty and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent.

Sprati.

Mercy above did hourly plead

For her resemblance here below;
And mild for givenness intercede

To stop the coming blow. Dryden.

5. Remission of a fine, penalty, or debt.

FORGIVER. n. f. [from for give.] One who pardons.

FORGOTTEN. } part. pass. of for get. Not re-FORGOTTEN. } membered.

This song shall not be for gotten. Deut. xxxii. 21.

Great Stafford! worthy of that name, though all

Of thee could be for gotten, but thy fall. Denham.

The soft ideas of the cheerful note,
Lightly receiv'd, were easily for got. Prior.

TO FORHA'IL. v. a. [An old word. Probably for for haul, from for and haul.] To harrafs; tear;
torment.

All this long tale

Nought easeth the care that doth me for bail.

Spenser's Pastoral.

FORK. n. f. [furca, Latin; fforch, Welsh;
fourche, French.]

1. An instrument divided at the end into two or more points or prongs, used on many occasions.

At Midsummer down with the brambles and brakes,

And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes.

Tupper.

The vicar first, and after him the crew,
With forks and staves the felon to pursue,

Ran Coll our dog. Dryden's Nun's Priest.

I dine with forks that have but two prongs. Swift.

2. It is sometimes used for the point of an arrow.

The bow is bent and drawn: make from the shaft.

—Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. A point.

Several are amazed at the wisdom of the ancients that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, burning, and melting. Addison on Medals.

TO FORK. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into blades, as corn does out of the ground.

The corn begetteth to fork. Mort. Husbandsy.

FORKED. adj. [from fork.] Opening into two or more parts.

Naked he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife. Shakespeare.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shaks.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools
Should in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gear'd.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

He would have spoke;
But his for his return'd, with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Ye dragons, whose contagious breath
Peoples the dark retreats of death,
Change your fierce hissing into joyful song,
And praise your Maker with your forked tongue.

Roscommon.

FORKEDLY. adv. [from forked.] In a forked
form.

FORKEDNESS. n. f. [from forked.] The quality of opening into two parts or more.

FORKHEAD. n. f. [fork and head.] Point of an arrow.

It seizing, no way enter might;
But back rebounding, left the forkhead keen,

Effoons it fled away, and might no where be seen.

Fairy Queen.

FORKY.

FOR

FORKY. adj. [from fork.] Forked; furcated; opening into two parts.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their forky tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope's Messiah.

FORLORE. [The preterite and participle of the Saxon forleoren, in Dutch verloren.] Deserted; forfook; forsaken. Obsolete.

Such as Diana by the sandy shore
Of swift Eurotas, or on Cynthus' green,
Where all the nymphs have her forlore. Fairy Queen.

That wretched world he 'gan for to abhor,
And mortal life 'gan loath, as thing forlore. Fairy Queen.

Thus fell the trees, with noise the desarts roar;
The beasts their caves, the birds their nests forlore. Fairfax.

FORLORN. adj. [from forleoren, from forleornan, Saxon; verloren, Dutch.]

1. Deserted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for what they wont to scorn;
Of fortune and of hope at once forlorn. Hubb. Tale.
Tell me, good Hobinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yborn?
Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lads forlorn? Spens. Past.

In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing shewed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forlorn. Kneller's History.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forlorn! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Their way
Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood;
The nodding horror of whose shady brows,
Threats the forlorn and wand'ring passenger. Mil.
My only strength and stay! forlorn of thee,
Whither shall I betake me, where subsist! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Like a declining statesman, left forlorn
To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Dunham.
The good old man, forlorn of human aid,
For vengeance to his heav'nly patron pray'd. Dryden's Iliad.

Philomel lament forlorn. Penton.
As some sad turtle his lost love deplores,
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, unpity'd, and forlorn. Pope's Autumn.

2. Taken away. This sense shews that it is the participle of an active verb, now lost.

When as night hath us of light forlorn,
I wish that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.
What is become of great Acrates' son!
Or where hath he hung up his mortal blade,
That hath so many haughty conquests won?
Is all his force forlorn, and all his glory done? Fairy Queen.

3. Small; despicable: in a ludicrous sense.
He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick fight were invincible. Shaksp. Henry IV.

FORLORN. n. f.
1. A lost, solitary, forsaken man.
Henry
Is of a king become a banish'd man,
And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn. Shaksp. Henry VI.

2. FORLORN Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed to perish.

Criticks in plume,
Who lolling on our foremost benches sit,
And still charge first, the true forlorn of wit. Dryden.

FORLORNNESS. n. f. [from forlorn.] Destitution; misery; solitude.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they complained the forlornness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

FOR

TO FORLY. v. n. [from fore and lye.] To lye before.

Knit with a golden baldric, which forlay
Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide
Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,

Now little 'gan to swell; and being ty'd,
Through her thin weed, their places only

FORM. n. f. [from forma, Latin; forme, French.]
1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too,
—Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms. Shaksp. Job.

It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof.

Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no gift. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.
When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
Here toils and death, and death's half-brother,
sleep,

Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep:
With anxious pleasure of a guilty mind,
Deep frauds before, and open force behind. Dryden's Aeneid.

3. Particular model or modification.
He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.
He hath no form nor comeliness. Isa. liii. 2.

5. Regularity; method; order.
What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. Shaksp. Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.

Then those whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judge their cause. Dryden.

They were young heirs sent only for forms from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rites.
Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r
Shall do a court'ry to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shaksp. K. Lear.

A long table, and a square table, or seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors opinions that sit lower. Bacon's Essays.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass, that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes. Davies on Ireland.

Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms. Clarendon.

How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
Is it a compliment of form, or love?
A. Philip's Discreet Mother.

FOR

8. Stated method; established practice; ritual and prescribed mode.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hooker.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confuted variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden's Aeneid.

9. A long seat.
If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Watts's Logic.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Stillingfleet.

10. A class; a rank of students.
It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

11. The seat or bed of a hare.
Now for a clod like hare in form thy peer;
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;
Now the ambitious lark, with mirror clear,
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidney.

Have you observ'd a fitting hare,
Lift'ning, and fearful of the storm
Of horns and hounds, clap back her ears,
Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form did adjoin itself. Hooker.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.
They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon's Natural History.

TO FORM. v. a. [from forma, Latin.]
1. To make out of materials.
God form'd man of the dust of the ground. Genesis, ii. 7.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought

Fulfil, or graven in metal. Milton.
Determin'd to advance into our room
A creature form'd of earth. Milton.
She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air. Pope.

2. To model to a particular shape or state.
Creature in whom excell'd
Whatever can to fight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet. Milton.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to foresight wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life was form'd. Milton.

3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.
Lucretius taught him not to form his heroes, to give him piety or valour for his manners. Dryden's Aeneid, Dedication.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner: as, he form'd his troops.

5. To adjust; to settle.
Our differences with the Romanists are thus form'd into an interest, and become the design not of single persons, but of corporations and successions. Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.
The.

The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions formed for promoting it. Decay of Piety.

He dies too soon;
And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:
The thought that labours in my forming brain,
Yet crude and immature, demands more time. Rowe.

7. To model by education or institution.
Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not:
Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryden's Virgil.

FORMAL. adj. [formel, French; formalis, Lat.]
1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation.

The justice,
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakspeare, As you like it.
Formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father. Shakspeare.

Ceremonies be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Bacon.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemies of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pirates. Bacon's Holy War.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And he that on their changes looks,
Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou dost obey 't where it concerns me most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice: the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillington's St. Thomas.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential character; it is; regular; proper.

Thou should'st come like a fury cover'd with snakes,
Not like a formal man. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I will not let him stir,
'Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again. Shakspeare's Comedy of Errors.

FORMALIST. n. f. [formaliste, French; from form.] One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satyr to persons of judgment, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficies to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon.

A grave, staunch, skilfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South.

FORMALITY. n. f. [formalite, French; from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.
The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estrange.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.
If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The barefaced perjury, and fix the shame. Dryden's Juvenal.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all flat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Gloucester's Scyllis.

4. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pound to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillington's St. Thomas.

To FORMALIZE. v. a. [formalizer; Fr. from formal.]

1. To model; to modify. A word not now in use.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker.

2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony. FORMALLY. adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies or rites.

Formally, according to our law,
Depose him. Shakspeare's Richard II.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier on Pride.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorized guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. South.

The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Smith's Bridge.

FORMATION. n. f. [formation, French; forma, Latin.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of volcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a foetus. Arbutnot.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Harris on the Mind.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FORMATIVE. adj. [from forma, Latin.] Having the power of giving form; plastic.

As we have established our assertion of the femal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley's Sermon.

FORMER. n. f. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray on the Creation.

FORMER. adj. [from forma, Saxon, first; whence former, and formost, now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Foremost is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say, the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time.

Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:
—A third is like the former. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past; as, this was the custom in former times.

The present point of time is all thou hast,
The future doubtful, and the former past. Hart.

FORMALLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.

The places were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their Summer. Addison on Italy.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal faults, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbutnot.

FORMIDABLE. adj. [formidabilis, Latin; formidabile, French.]

Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind. Dryden's Aeneid, Dedication.

They seem'd to fear the formidable fight,
And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. f. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chuse to be shew'd the *formidable*ness of their danger, than by a blind embracing it, to perish. Decay of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remoter shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread!
The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FORMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless without regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love. Shakspeare's King John.

FORMULARY.

FORMULARY. n. f. [formulaire, French; from formule.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.

FORMULARY. adj. Ritual; prescribed; stated.

TO FORNIFICATE. v. a. [from fornex, Latin.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance.

FORNICATION. n. f. [fornication, French; fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at beft.

2. In Scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, thou playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by.

FORNICATOR. n. f. [fornicateur, French; from fornex, Latin.]

One that has commerce with unmarried women. A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul, as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour.

FORNICATRESS. n. f. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd; Let her have needful but not slavish means.

TO FORSAKE. v. a. preter. forsook; part. forsook, or forfaken. [versacken, Dutch.]

1. To leave in repentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God forsook, God Saul; the room in's heart wild passions took.

Orestes come in time

To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace; Prevent his fallhood, and forfakes him first:

I know you hate him. A. Phillips's Discreet Mother.

Daughter of Jove, whose arms in thunder wield Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield, Forfok by thee, in vain I fought thy aid.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from. Unwilling I forfok your friendly state, Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate.

3. To desert; to fail. Truth, modesty, and shame the world forfok; Fraud, avarice, and force their places took.

When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more, Forfaken of all light the left the shore.

Their purple majesty, And all those outward shows which we call greatness, Languish and droop, seem empty and forfaken, And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more.

FORSAKER. n. f. [from forfaken.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forfakers of God.

FORSOOTH. adv. [forsoðe, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lyfander

Deny your love, so rich within his soul, And tender me, forsooth, affection!

A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French.

In the East Indies, a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that flumen orationis that Cicero speaks of.

2. It is supposed once to have been a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shewed his attention by answering in the word yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation.

It appears in Shakespeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam.

TO FORSWEAR. v. a. pret. forfware; part. forfsworn. [forþswæran, Saxon.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow Never to wooe her more; but do forfwear her, As one unworthy all the former favours

That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. 2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chain about his neck, Which he forfware most monstrously to have.

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forfook, How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!

Like innocence, and as serenely bold As truth, how loudly he forfswears thy gold!

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forfswear himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forfsworn? To leave fair Sylvia, shall I be forfsworn?

To wrong my friend, shall I be much forfsworn? And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath, Provokes me to this threefold perjury. One says, he never should endure the fight Of that forfsworn, that wrongs both lands and laws.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn, Eternal love and endless faith to Theus; And yet am false, forfsworn: the hallow'd shrine, That heard me swear, is witness to my fallhood.

TO FORSWEAR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand, To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

—And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee, For false forfswearing, and for murder too.

FORSWERER. n. f. [from forfswear.] One who is perjured.

FORT. n. f. [fort, French.] A fortified house; a castle.

Throughout fortibrights and meanders.

Shakespeare's Tempest.

FORTHWITH. adv. [from forth and with.] Immediately; without delay; at once; strait.

Fortwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
Unto his guest; who, after troublous fights
And dreams, 'gan now to take more found repast.

Spenser.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should fortwith utterly become frustrate.

Hooker.

Neither did the martial men dally or prosecute the service faintly, but did fortwith quench that fire.

Davies on Ireland.

Fortwith began these fury-moving sounds,
The notes of wrath, the music brought from hell,
The rattling drums.

Daniel's Civil War.

The winged heralds, by command
Of sov'reign pow'r, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council fortwith to be held At Pandæmonium.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it fortwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived.

South.

FOURTIETH. adj. [from forty.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail

To be the fortieth man in an entail?
Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the forty thousandth part.

Swift.

FORTIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICATION. n. f. [from fortification, French; from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary.

Harri.

The Phœnicians, tho' an unwarlike nation, yet understood the art of fortification.

Broom on the Odyssey.

2. A place built for strength.

The hounds were uncoupled, and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging.

Sidney.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortification, being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgments, might dispense some advantage.

Sidney.

3. Addition of strength. Not much used.

To strengthen the infested parts, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote.

Government of the Tongue.

FOURTIFFER. n. f. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifier of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who often had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution.

Sidney.

TO FORTIFY. v. a. [from fortify, French.]

Great Dunfinane he strongly fortifies.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He fortified the city against besieging. Ecclesiastical 1. 4.

2. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires.

Sidney.

To fortify the former opinions Tostatus adds, that those which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned.

FOR

Raleigh.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul:

The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face.

Dryden.

A young man before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues.

Locke.

TO FORTIFY. v. n. To raise strong places.

Thou us impower'd

To fortify thus far and overlay
With this portentous bridge the dark abyss.

Milton.

FORTILAGE. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort; a blockhouse.

Yet was the fence thereof but weak and thin
Nought fear'd their force that fortilage to win.

Spenser.

In all straits and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which should keep and command the straight.

Spenser on Ireland.

FORTIN. n. f. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege.

Homer.

Thou hast talk'd

Of palisades, fortins, parapets.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FOURITUDE. n. f. [from fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,

Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The better fortitude

Of patience and heroic martyrdom Unfing.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man.

Locke.

They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs; partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, and partly that virtue, even in this world, might not lose its reward.

Nelson.

2. Strength; force; not in use.

He wrongs his fame,

Despairing of his own arms fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell!

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

FOURLET. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort.

FOURNIGHT. n. f. [contracted from fourteen nights, peopetyn night, Saxon. It was the custom of the ancient Norman nations to count time by nights: thus we say, this day seven-nights. So Tacitus, non dicunt mensem, ut nos, sed noctium computant.] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight.

Sidney.

Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnight's space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick.

Bacon's Natural History.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad.

Dryden.

He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, 'till about a fortnight before.

Swift.

FORTRESS. n. f. [from fortress, French.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest; he overran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses.

Spenser on Ireland.

The trump of death sounds in their hearing shrill:

Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave.

Fairfax.

God is our fortress, in whose conquering name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legends of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors.

Locke.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [from fortuitus, French; fortuitus, Lat.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.

A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of atoms.

Ray.

If casual concourse did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;

Blackmore.

For how from chance can constant order spring.

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.] Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements.

Rogers.

FOURUNATE. adj. [from fortunatus, Latin.] Lucky; happy; successful not subject to miscarriage. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before.

Dryden's Knight's Tale.

No, there is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:
True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,
But right before there is no precipice;
Fear makes them look aside, and so their footing miss.

Dryden.

FOURUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.] Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And boldly wife, and fortunately great.

Prior.

FOURUNATENESS. n. f. [from fortunate.] Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whose greatest fortune is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness.

Sidney.

FORTUNE. n. f. [from fortuna, Latin; fortuna, French.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

2. The good or ill that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day,
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:

Among to brave a people you are they
Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize.

Dryden.

The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies.

Bentley.

3. The chance of life; means of living.

His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune.

Swift.

4. Success, good or bad; event.

This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators.

Temple.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;
Our equal crimes shall equal fortune give.

Dryden's Innocent.

5. Estate; possessions.

If thou do'st,
And this obstructs thee, thou do'st make thy way
To noble fortune.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortune.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

But tell me, Tityrus, what heavenly power
Preserv'd your fortunes in that fatal hour?

Dryden's Virgil, Pastorals.

The

The fate which governs poets, thought it fit
He should not raise his fortunes by his wit. Dryden.
He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune. Swift.
6. The portion of a man or woman: generally of a woman.

I am thought some heiress rich in lands,
Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing.

The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in view. Spenser.

When miss delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may her fortune get. Swift.
7. Futurity; future events.

You who mens fortunes in their faces read,
To find out mine, look not, alas, on me:
But mark her face, and all the features heed;
For only there is writ my destiny.

To FORTUNE. v. n. [from the noun.] To befall; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass.

It fortune'd, as fair it then befel
Behind his back, unweeting, where he stood,
Of ancient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood.

It fortune'd the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning. Knolles.
I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortune'd.

Here fortune'd Curl to slide. Pope's Dunciad.
FORTUNED. adj. Supplied by fortune.

Not th' imperious shew
Of the full fortune'd Caesar ever shall,
Be brook'd with me. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

FORTUNEBOOK. n. f. [fortune and book.] A book consulted to know fortune, or future events.
Thou know'st a face, in whose each look Beauty lays ope love's fortunebook;

On whose fair revolutions wait
The obsequious motions of love's fate. Craik.
FORTUNEHUNTER. n. f. [from fortune and hunt.]
A man whose employment is to enquire after women with great portions, to enrich himself by marrying them.

We must, however, distinguish between for-tunehunters and fortunetellers. Spenser.
To FORTUNETELL. v. n. [fortune and tell.]
1. To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.

We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetel-ling. Shakespeare.
I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you. Shakespeare.

The gypsies were to divide the money got by stealing linen, or by fortune-telling. Walton's Angler.
2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his canting drone pipe scan'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortunetelling lines. Cleland.

FORTUNETELLER. n. f. [fortune and teller.]
One who cheats common people, by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shakespeare.

A Welchman being at a feissions-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Haft thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot?

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other, to the setting up of a fortuneteller. L'Estrange.

Long ago a fortune teller
Exactly said what now befell her. Swift.
FORTY. adj. [peopepzig, Saxon.] Four times ten.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He that upon levity quits his station, in hopes to be better, 'tis forty to one he loses. L'Estrange.
FORUM. n. f. [Latin.] Any publick place.

The forum was a public place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before their proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend. Watts on the Mind.

Close to the bay great Neptune's fane adjoins,
And near a forum flank'd with marble shines, Where the bold youth, the num'rous fleets to store,

Shape the broad sail, or smooth the taper oar. Pope.

To FORWARD. v. a. [for and wander.] To wander wildly and wearily.

The better part now of the ling'ring day
They travelled had, when as they far esp'd
A weary wight forward'ring by the way. F. Qu.
FORWARD. adv. [forwærd, Saxon.] Towards; to a part or place before; onward; progressively.

When fervent sorrow flaked was,
She up arose, resolving him to find
Alive or dead, and forward forth doth pass.

From smaller things the mind of the hearers may go forward to the knowledge of greater, and climb up from the lowest to the highest things. Hooker.

He that is used to go forward, and findeth a stop, falleth of his own favour, and is not the thing he was. Bacon's Essays.

FORWARD. adj. [from the adverb.]
1. Warm; earnest; not backward.
They would that we should remember the poor, which I also was forward to do.

2. Ardent; eager; hot; violent.
You'll still be too forward.

Unskill'd to dart the pointed spear,
Or lead the forward youth to noble war. Prior.

3. Ready; confident; presumptuous.
Old Butes' form he took, Anchises squire,
Now left to rule Ascanius by his fire;

And thus salutes the boy, too forward for his years,
Dryden.

4. Not reserved; not over modest.
'Tis a per'ous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;

He's all the mother's from the top to toe.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

5. Premature; early ripe.
Short Summer lightly has a forward Spring.

6. Quick; ready; hasty.
The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them. Locke.

Had they, who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which these propositions are made, they would not perhaps have been so forward to believe they were innate. Locke.

7. Antecedent; anterior; opposed to posterior.
Let us take the instant by the forward top;
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare.

8. Not behindhand; not inferior.
My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
She is i' th' rear o' our birth. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

To FORWARD. v. a. [from the adverb.]
1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate in growth or improvement.

As we house hot country plants, as lemons, to fave them; so we may house our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons. Bacon's Natural History.

Whenever I shine,
I forward the grafts and I ripen the vine. Swift.

2. To patronise; to advance.
FORWARD. n. f. [from forward.] He who promotes any thing.

FORWARDLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Eagerly; hastily; quickly.

The sudden and surprising turns we ourselves have felt, should not suffer us too forwardly to admit presumption. Atterbury.

FORWARDNESS. n. f. [from forward.]
1. Eagerness; ardour; readiness to act.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hooker.

It is so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a bridle to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning. Hooker.

The great ones were in forwardness, the people in fury, entertaining this airy phantasm with incredible affection. Bacon.

2. Quickness; readiness.
He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness: that his brothers, who were under the same training, might hold pace with him. Watson.

3. Earliness; early ripeness.
4. Confidence; assurance; want of modesty.

In France it is usual to bring their children into company, and to cherish in them, from their infancy, a kind of forwardness and assurance.

FORWARDS. adv. Straight before; progressively; not backwards.

The Rhodian ship passed through the whole Roman fleet, backwards and forwards several times, carrying intelligence to Drepanum.

FOSSE. n. f. [fossa, Latin; fos, Welsh.] A ditch; a moat.

FOSSIL. n. f. [fossil, Latin; fossile, French.]
That which is dug out of the earth.

The fossil shells are many of them of the same kinds with those that now appear upon the neighbouring shores; and the rest such as may be presumed to be at the bottom of the adjacent seas.

Fossil or rock salt, and sal gemm, differ not in nature from each other; nor from the common salt of salt springs, or that of the sea, when pure.

It is of a middle nature, between fossil and animal, being produced from animal excrements, intermixed with vegetable salts. Arbutnot on Coins.

FOSSIL. n. f.
In this globe are many other bodies, which, because we discover them by digging into the bowels of the earth, are called by one common name fossils; under which are comprehended metals and minerals. Locke.

Many fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped.

By the word fossil, used as a denomination of one of three general divisions of natural productions, we understand bodies formed usually within the earth, sometimes on its surface, and sometimes in waters; of a plain and simple structure, in which there is no difference of parts, no distinction of vessels and their contents, but every portion of which is similar to and perfect as the whole.

The bodies which melt in the fire are called minerals, the rest fossils. Pemberton.

To FOSTER. v. a. [forstian, Saxon.]
1. To nurse; to feed; to support; to train up.

Some say that ravens foster forlorn children.

Our Kingdom's earth should not be soil'd
With that dear blood, which it hath fostered.
Shakespeare's Richard II.

That base wretch,
Bred but on alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood.
Davies on Ireland.

No more let Ireland brag her harmless nation
Fosters no venom, since that Scots plantation.
Cleveland.

The son of Mulciber,
Found in the fire, and foster'd in the plains,
A shepherd and a king at once he reigns.
Dryden's Æneid.

FOSTERCHILD. n. f. [Porten cild, Saxon.] A child nursed by a woman not the mother, or bred by a man not the father.

The fosterchildren do love and are beloved of their fosterfathers. Davies on Ireland.

The goddess thus beguill'd,
With pleasant stories, her false fosterchild.
Addison's Ovid.

FOSTERDAM. n. f. [foster and dam.] A nurse; one that performs the office of a mother by giving food to a young child.

There, by the wolf, were laid the martial twins;

Intrepid on her swelling dugs they hung;
The fosterdam loll'd out her fawning tongue.
Dryden's Æneid.

FOSTEREARTH. n. f. [foster and earth.] Earth by which the plant is nourished, though it did not grow at first in it.

In vain the nursing grove
Seems fair a while, cherish'd with fosterearth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails! Philips.

FOSTERER. n. f. [from foster.] A nurse; one who gives food in the place of a parent.

In Ireland they put their children to fosterers; the rich men selling, the meaner for buying the alterage of their children: in the opinion of the Irish, fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood. Davies on Ireland.

FOSTERFATHER. n. f. [Porten fæder, Sax.] One who gives food in the place of the father.

In Ireland fosterchildren do love and are beloved by their fosterfathers, and their sept, more than of their own natural parents and kindred. Davies on Ireland.

The duke of Bretagne having been an host and a kind of parent or fosterfather to the king, in his tenderness of age and weakness of fortune, did look for aid this time from king Henry.
Bacon's Henry VII.

Tyrreus, the fosterfather of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist.
Dryden's Æneid.

FOSTERMOTHER. n. f. [foster and mother.] A nurse.

FOSTERNURSE. n. f. [foster and nurse.] This is an improper compound, because foster and nurse mean the same. A nurse.

Our *foster*ness of nature is repose,
The which he lacks. Shakespeare's King Lear.

FOSTERSON. n. f. [foster and son.] One fed and educated, though not the son by nature.

Mature in years, to ready honours move;
O of celestial feed! O *foster*son of love!
Dryden's Virgil.

FOUGADE. n. f. [French.] In the art of war,

a sort of little mine in the manner of a well, scarce more than ten feet wide and twelve deep, dug under some work or fortification, and charged with barrels or sacks of gunpowder to blow it up, and covered over with earth. Dict.

FOUGHT. The preterite and participle of fight. Though unknown to me, they were fought well, Whom Rupert led, and who were British born. Dryden.

FOUGHTEN. [The passive participle of fight. Rarely used.] Contested; disputed by arms.

On the foughten field
Michael and his angels, prevalent
Encamping, plac'd in guard their watches round Cherubick waving fires. Milt. Paradise Lost.

Satire has always shone among the rest,
And is the boldest way, if not the best,
To tell men truly of their foul faults,
To laugh at their vain deeds, and vainer thoughts. Dryden.

4. Not lawful; not according to the established rules.

By foul play were we heav'd thence,
But blessedly help'd hither. Shakespeare's Tempest.

5. Hateful; ugly; loathsome.
Th' other half did woman's shape retain,
Most loathsome, filthy, foul, and full of vile disdain. Fairy Queen.

Haft thou forgot
The foul witch Sycorax, who with age and envy
Was grown into a hoop? Shakespeare's Tempest.

Foul fights do rather displease, in that they excite the memory of foul things than in the immediate objects; and therefore, in pictures, those foul fights do not much offend. Bacon.

All things that seem so foul and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively. More.

6. Disgraceful; shameful.
Too well I see and rue the dire event,
That with sad overthrow and foul defeat
Hath lost us heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Who first seduc'd them to that foul revolt?
Milton's Paradise Lost.

Reason half extinct,
Or impotent, or else approving, fees
The foul disorder. Thomson's Spring.

Severing each kind, scum'd the bullion drops. Milton.

FOUND'ATION. n. f. [fondation, French.]

1. The basis or lower parts of an edifice.

The stateliness of houses, the goodness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye; but that foundation which beareth up the one, that root which ministrereth unto the others nourishment, is in the bosom of the earth concealed. Hooker.

That is the way to make the city flat,

To bring the roof to the foundation,

To bury all. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

O love, I think,

Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,

Where they should be reliev'd. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

I draw a line along the shore;

I lay the deep foundations of a wall,

And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryden's Æneid.

2. The act of fixing the basis.
Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest,

Since their foundation, came a nobler guest. Tickel.

3. The principles or ground on which any notion is raised.

that he is unable to set it to the ground.

Phœbus' steeds are founder'd

Or night kept chain'd below. Shakspeare's Tempest.

I have founded nine score and odd posts; and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight: but what of that? he saw me and yielded.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high

As any other Pegasus can fly;

So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,

Than all the swift-fin'd ragers of the flood. Dorf.

Brutes find out where their talents lie:

A bear will not attempt to fly;

A founder'd horse will oft debate,

Before he tries a five-barr'd gate. Swift.

If you find a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your master to sell him, because he is vicious, and founded into the bargain. Swift's Directions to the Groom.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of foundering or breaking their backs, and will be sure to find them neither retty nor vicious. Swift.

To FOUNDER. v. n. [from fond, French, the bottom.]

1. To sink to the bottom.
New ships, built at those rates, have been ready to founder in the seas with every extraordinary storm. Raleigh's Essays.

2. To fail; to miscarry.

In this point

All his tricks founder; and he brings his physick

After his patient's death. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

FOUNDER. n. f. [founder, French; from found.] A place where figures are formed of melted metal; a castinghouse.

FOUNDLING. n. f. [from found of find.] A child exposed to chance; a child found without any parent or owner.

We, like bastards, are laid abroad, even as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow. Sidney.

I pass the foundling by, a race unknown,

At doors expos'd, whom matrons make their own,

And into noble families advance

A nameless issue; the blind work of chance. Dryden's Juvenal.

A piece of charity practised by most of the nations about us, is a provision for foundlings, or for those children who are exposed to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents. Addison.

The godless long had mark'd the child's distress,

And long had fought his suff'rings to redress;

She prays the gods to take the foundling's part,

To teach his hands some beneficial art. Gay's Tri.

FOUNDERESS. n. f. [from founder.]

1. A woman that founds, builds, establishes, or begins any thing.

2. A woman that establishes any charitable revenue.

For of their order she was patroness,

Albe Clarissa was their chief's foundress. Fairy Q.

For zeal like hers, her servants were to show;

She was the first, where need requir'd to go;

Herself the foundress, and attendant too. Dryden.

FOUNT. n. f. [font, Latin; fontaine, French.]

1. A well; a spring.

He set before him spread

A table of celestial food divine,

Ambrosial fruits, fetch'd from the tree of life;

And from the fount of life ambrosial drink. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

2. A small basin of springing water.

Proofs as clear as founts in July, when

We see each grain of gravel. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Can a man drink better from the fountain finely paved with marble, than when it swells over the green turf. Taylor.

Narcissus on the grassy verdure lies;

But whilst within the chrystal fount he tries

To quench his heat, he feels new heat arise. Addison.

3. A jet; a spout of water.

Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one that sprinkleth or spouteth water; the other a fair receipt of water, without fish, or slime, or mud. Bacon.

4. The head or first spring of a river.

All actions of your grace are of a piece, as waters keep the tenor of their fountains: your compassion is general, and has the same effect as well on enemies as friends. Dryden.

5. Original; first principle; first cause.

Almighty God, the fountain of all goodness. Cosmos Prayer.

You may reduce many thousand bodies to these few general figures, as unto their principal heads and fountains. Peaburn.

FOU

This one city may well be reckoned not only the seat of trade and commerce, not only the fountain of habits and fashions, and good breeding, but of morally good or bad manners to all England.

Spratt's Sermons.
FOUNTAINLESS. adj. [from fountain.] Having no fountain; wanting a spring.

So large
The prospect was, that here and there was room
For barren desert fountainless and dry.

Milton's Paradise Regained.
FOUNTFUL. adj. [from fount and full.] Full of springs.

But when the fountful Ida's top they scal'd with utmost haste,

All fell upon the high-hair'd oaks. Chapm. Iliads.
TO FOUPE. v. a. To drive with sudden impetuosity. A word out of use.

We pronounce, by the confession of strangers, as smoothly and moderately as any of the northern nations, who foupe their words out of the throat with fat and full spirits. Camden.

FOUR. adj. [peopen, Saxon.] Twice two.
Just as I with'd, the lots were cast on four;
Myself the fifth. Pope's Odyssey.

FOURBE. n. f. [French.] A cheat; a tricking fellow. Not in use.

Jove's envoy, through the air,
Brings dismal tidings; as if such low care
Could reach their thoughts, or their repose disturb!
Thou art a false impostor, and a fourbe. Denham.

FOURFO'LD. adj. [from four and fold.] Four times told.

He shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he had no pity. 2 Sam. xii. 6.

FOURFO'OTED. adj. [from four and foot.] Quadruped; having twice two feet.

Augur Aitylos, whose art in vain
From fight dissuaded the four-footed train,
Now beat the hoof with Nessus on the plain. Dryden.

FOURSCORE. adj. [from four and score.]
1. Four times twenty; eighty.

When they were out of reach, they turned and crossed the ocean to Spain, having lost four-score of the ships, and the greater part of their men. Bacon's War with Spain.

The Chiots were first a free people, being a commonwealth, maintaining a navy of four-score ships. Sundys.

The Liturgy had, by the practice of near four-score years, obtained great veneration from all former Protestants. Clarendon.

2. It is used elliptically for four-score years in numbering the age of man.

At seventy years many their fortunes seek;
But at four-score it is too late a week.

Shakespeare's As you like It.
Some few might be of use in council upon great occasions, 'till after three-score and ten; and the two late ministers in Spain were so 'till four-score. Templ.

FOURSQUA'RE. adj. [from four and square.] Quadrangular; having four sides and angles equal.

The temple of Bel was invironed with a wall carried four-square, of great height and beauty; and on each square certain brazen gates curiously engraven. Raleigh's History.

FOURTE'EN. adj. [peopeptyn, Saxon.] Four and ten; twice seven.

I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale. Shakespeare.

FOURTE'ENTH. adj. [from fourteen.] The ordinal of fourteen; the fourth after the tenth.

I have not found any that see the ninth day, few before the twelfth, and the eyes of some not open before the fourteenth day. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FOURTH. adj. [from four.] The ordinal of four; the first after the third.

A third is like the former: filthy hags!
Why do you shew me this? A fourth? start eye!
What! will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom? Shakespeare.

FOURTHLY. adv. [from fourth.] In the fourth place.

FOX

Fourthly, plants have their seed and seminal parts uppermost, and living creatures have them lowermost. Bacon's Natural History.

FOURWHE'ELED. adj. [from four and wheel.] Running upon twice two wheels.

Scarce twenty four-wheel'd cars, compact and strong,
The maffy load could bear, and roll along. Pope's Odyssey.

FO'UTRA. n. f. [from foutre, French.] A fig; a scoff; a word of contempt. Not used.

A foutra for the world, and worldlings base. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FOWL. n. f. [fugel, puh, Saxon; vogel, Dutch.] A winged animal; a bird. It is colloquially used of edible birds, but in books of all the feathered tribes. Fowl is used collectively: as, we dined upon fish and fowl.

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their male subjects, and at their controuls. Shakespeare.

Lucullus entertained Pompey in a magnificent house: Pompey said, this is a marvellous house for the Summer; but methinks very cold for Winter. Lucullus answered, do you not think me as wise as divers fowls, to change my habitation in the Winter Season? Bacon's Apophthegms.

This mighty breath
Instructs the fowls of heaven. Thomson's Spring.

TO FOWL. v. n. [from the noun.] To kill birds for food or game.

FO'WLER. n. f. [from fowl.] A sportsman who pursues birds.

The fowler, warn'd
By those good omens, with swift early steps Treads the crimp earth, ranging through fields and glades,

Offensive to the birds. Philips.
With slaughter'ing guns th' unwearied fowlers
roves,

When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves. Pope.

FO'WLINGPIECE. n. f. [from fowl and piece.] A gun for birds.

'Tis necessary that the countryman be provided with a good fowlingpiece. Montimer.

FOX. n. f. [fox, Saxon; vos, wofsch, Dutch.]
1. A wild animal of the canine kind, with sharp ears, and a bushy tail, remarkable for his cunning, living in holes, and preying upon fowls or small animals.

The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb. Shakespeare.

He that trusts to you,
Where he should find you lions, finds you hares:
Where foxes, geese. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

These retreats are more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

2. By way of reproach, applied to a knave or cunning fellow.

FO'XCASE. n. f. [from fox and case.] A fox's skin.

One had better be lashed at for taking a fox-case for a fox, than be destroyed by taking a live fox for a case. L'Estrange.

FO'XCHASE. n. f. [from fox and chase.] The pursuit of the fox with hounds.

See the same man, in vigour, in the gout;
Alone, in company; in place or out;
Early at business, and at hazard late;
Mad at a foxchase, wife at a debate. Pope.

FO'XEVIL. n. f. [from fox and evil.] A kind of disease in which the hair sheds.

FO'XFISH. n. f. [andipiscus piscis.] A fish.

And of them both did foy and tribute raise. Fairy Queen.

TO FRACT. v. a. [fractus, Latin.] To break; to violate; to infringe. Found perhaps only in the following passage.

His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fracted dates
Has smit my credit. Shakespeare's Timon.

FRACTION. n. f. [fraction, French; fractio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking; the state of being broken.

The surface of the earth hath been broke, and the parts of it dislocated; several parcels of nature retain still the evident marks of fraction and ruin. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. A broken part of an integral.

The fractions of her faith, arts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy reliques
Of her o'er eaten faith, are bound to Diomedes. Shakespeare.

Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, consisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fractions and broken parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction. Arbutnot on China.

FRACTIONAL. adj. [from fraction.] Belonging to a broken number; comprising a broken number.

We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractional numbers. Cocker's Arithmetick.

FRACTURE. n. f. [fractura, Latin.]

1. Breach; separation of continuous parts.

That may do it without any great fracture of the more stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the laws thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. The separation of the continuity of a bone in living bodies.

But thou wilt sin and grief destroy,
That so the broken bones may joy,
And tune together in a well-set song,
Full of his praises,
Who dead men raises;
Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong. Herbert.

Fractures of the skull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected. Sharp's Surgery.

TO FRACTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To break a bone.

The leg was dressed, and the fractured bones united together. Wifeman's Surgery.

FRA'GILE. adj. [fragile, French; fragilis, Latin.]

1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.

To ease them of their griefs,
Their pangs of love, and other incident throes,
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage. Shakespeare's Timon.

The stalk of ivy is tough, and not fragile. Bacon's Natural History.

When subtle wits have spun their threads too fine,
'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line. Denham.

A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet in the moist substance there is less rest than in what is drier and more fragile. Glanville.

2. Weak; uncertain; easily destroyed.

Much

F R A

Much ostentation, vain of fleshly arms,
And fragile arms, much instrument of war,
Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,
Before mine eyes thou'lt set.

Milton's Paradise Regained.

FRAGILITY. n. f. [from fragile.]

1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.

To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for two or three days.

Bacon's Natural History.

2. Weakness; uncertainty; easiness to be destroyed.

Fear the uncertainty of man's fragility, the common chance of war, the violence of fortune.

Knollys History.

3. Frailty; lability to fault.

All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility.

Wotton.

FRAGMENT. n. f. [fragmentum, Latin.] A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.

He who late a sceptre did command,
Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand.

Dryden.

Cowley, in his unfinished fragments of the Davids, has shewn us this way to improvement.

Watts on the Mind.

If a thin or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour.

Newton's Opticks.

Some on painted wood

Transfix'd the fragments, some prepar'd the food.

Pope's Odyssey.

FRAGMENTARY. adj. [from fragment.] Composed of fragments. A word not elegant, nor in use.

She, she is gone; she's gone: when thou know'st this

Donne.

What fragmentary rubbish this world is,
Thou know'st, and that it is not worth a thought;
He knows it too too much that thinks it nought.

FRAGOR. n. f. [Latin.] A noise; a crack;

a crash. Not used.

Pursu'd by hideous fragors, as before

The flames descend, they in their breaches roar.

Sandys.

FRAGRANCE. } n. f. [fragantia, Latin.]

FRAGRANCY. } Sweetness of smell; pleasing scent; grateful odour.

Eve separate he spies,

Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood Half y'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of cole-worts and cabbages springing up in their full fra-grancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats.

Addison's Spectator.

Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrance.

Garth.

Such was the wine; to quench whose fervent steam

Scarce twenty measures from the living stream

To cool one cup suffic'd; the goblet crown'd,
Breath'd aromatic fragrances around.

Pope's Odyssey.

FRA'GRANT. adj. [fragrans, Latin.] Odorous; sweet of smell.

Fragrant the fertile earth

After soft showers; and sweet the coming on
Of grateful evening mild.

Milton.

The nymph vouchsaf'd to place

Upon her head the various wreath;
The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;

Their scent, less fragrant than her breath.

Prior.

FRA'GRANTLY. adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.

As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

FRAIL. n. f.

1. A basket made of rushes.

2. A rush for weaving baskets.

FRAIL. adj. [fragilis, Latin.]

F R A

1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.

I know my body's of so frail a kind,

As force without, fevers within can kill.

Davies.

When with care we have rais'd an imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand.

Rogers.

2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.

The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may these also speak amiss: man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fall in words.

Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

FRAILNESS. n. f. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.

There is nothing among all the frailties and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtue of a coward.

North.

FRAILTY. n. f. [from frail.]

1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind;
infirmity.

Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily.

Shakespeare.

Nor should'st thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:

Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel.

Milton's Agonistes.

God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do.

Locke.

2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity: in this sense it has a plural

Love did his reason blind,

And love's the noblest frailty of the mind.

Dryden's Ind. Emp.

Kind wits will those light faults excuse;
Those are the common frailties of the muse.

Dryden.

Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;

Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait 'till 'tis no sin to mix with thine.

Pope.

That Christians are now not only like other men in their frailties and infirmities, might be in some degree excusable; but the complaint is, they are like heathens in all the main and chief articles of their lives.

Larv.

FRAISCHEUR. n. f. [French.] Freshness;
coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.

Hither in summer-evenings you repair,

To taste the fraischeur of the purer air.

Dryden.

and union of various parts.

The double gates he findeth locked fast;

The one fair fram'd of burnish'd ivory,
The other all with silver overcast.

Spenser.

2. To fit one to another.

They rather cut down their timber to frame it, and to do necessities to their convenient use, than to fight.

Abbot.

Hew timber, saw it, frame it, and set it together

Mortimer.

3. To make; to compose.

Then chusing out few words most horrible,
Thereof did verses frame.

Spenser.

Fight valiantly to-day;
And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it;

For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour.

Shakespeare.

4. To regulate; to adjust.

Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it.

Tillotson.

5. To form to any rule or method by study or precept.

Thou art their foldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame

Thyself forsooth hereafter theirs.

Shakespeare. Coriol.

F R A

I have been a truant to the law;
I never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the law unto my will.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

6. To form and digest by thought.

The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from its own operations about them.

Locke.

Full of that flame his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddesses by your matchless charms.

Granville.

Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies,
And sure he will; for wisdom never lies.

Pope's Odyssey.

How many excellent reasons are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years.

Watts.

9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense: as,
to frame a story or lie.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricks and epicycles.

Bacon.

FRAME. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A fabrick; any thing constructed of various parts or members.

If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen.

Hooker.

Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence.

Bacon.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! thine this universal frame.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Divine Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal frame.

Dryden.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame,

Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,

The labour of a god; and all along

Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it strong.

Dryden.

We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it; all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author.

Tillotson.

2. Any thing made so as to inclose or admit something else.

Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances.

Boyle.

His picture scarcely would deserve a frame.

Dryden's Juvenal.

A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shine, where it rubs against the palm of one's hand.

Newton's Opticks.

3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.

A woman that is like a German clock,

Still a repairing, ever out of frame,
And never going aright.

Shakespeare.

Your steady soul preserves her frame;

In good and evil times the same.

Swift.

4. Scheme; order.

Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church.

Clarendon.

FRANKALMOIGNE. n. f. The same which we in Latin call libera elemosyna, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers by the name of a tenure in frank almonie, or frankalmoigne, which, according to Britton, is a tenure by divine service.

FRANKINCENSE. n. f. [frank and incense; so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]

Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acrid, and resinous taste. It is very inflammable.

The earliest histories inform us that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it continues to be in many parts. We are still uncertain as to the place where frankincense is brought, and as to the tree which produces it.

Take unto thee sweet spices, with pure frankincense.

I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense gotten in India.

Black ebony only will in India grow, And od'rous frankincense on the Sabean bough.

Cedar and frankincense, an od'rous pile, Flam'd on the hearth, and wide perfum'd the isle.

3. Without reserve.

He entered very frankly into those new designs, which we contrived at court.

FRANKNESS. n. f. [from frank.]

1. Plainness of speech; openness; ingenuousness.

When the conde duke had some eclatification with the duke, in which he made all the protestations of his sincere affection, the other received his protestations with all contempt; and declared, with a very unnecessary frankness, that he would have no friendship with him.

Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship: his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner he intended to do afterwards.

2. Liberality; bounteousness.

3. Freedom from reserve.

He delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, word by word, what Kalandar had told him touching the strange story.

The ablest men that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity.

FRANKPLEDGE. n. f. [francplegium, Latin; of franc, i. e. liber & pleige, i. e. fides jussor.] A pledge or surety for freemen. For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the public peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decentia, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decentior. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus francplegii, view of frankpledge.

Reinfred, sincere peace. Gibson's Camden.

FREE. adj. [fræah, Saxon, vry, Dutch.]

1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependant.

A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any conditions of subjection.

Temple.

Free, what, and fetter'd with so many chains?
Dryden.

How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will?

Locke.

This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains.

Prior.

Set an unhappy pris'ner free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee.

Prior.

2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.

Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a public constitution for the ordering of the church.

Hooker.

Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent.

South.

3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell:
Not free, what proof could they have giv'n sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd;
Not what they would? Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Permitted; allowed.

Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you? Shakespeare's Tam. of the Shrew.

conversation of their friends.

Temple.

The critics have been very free in their censures.

Fulton.

VOL. I. N° 19 4 U I know

F R E

I know there are to whose presumptuous thoughts
Those free beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults.

Pope.

6. Open; ingenuous; frank.
Castilio, I have doubts within my heart;
Will you be free and candid to your friend?

Orway's Orphan.

7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.
'Tis not to make me jealous;
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, fings, plays, and dances well,
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great laughter.

Hakewill on Providence.

Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe.

Prior.

8. Liberal; not parsimonious; with of.
Glo'ster too, a foe to citizens,
O'ercharging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

No statute in his favour says,
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as others spare.

Pope's Horace.

Alexandrian verses of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works.

Pope.

9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.

We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

10. Clear from distress.
Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

11. Guiltless; innocent.
Make mad the guilty, and appall the free,
Confound the ignorant.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

My hands are guilty, but my heart is free. Dryd.

12. Exempt: with of anciently; more properly from.

These

Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
And free from conscience, is a slave to fame. Denb.
Let envy, then, those crimes within you see,
From which the happy never must be free. Dryden.

Their steeds around,

Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground.

Dryden.

The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions.

Locke.

13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without vassalage; admitted to the privileges of any body: with of.

He therefore makes all birds of every feet
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
Their several kinds alike, and equally protect.

Dryden.

What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end

Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark-staring mad, that thou should'st tempt the sea?

Dryden.

14. Without expence; by charity, as a free school.
To FREE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.

The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
By law and process of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to The anger of the king, not guilty of,
If any be, the trespass of the queen.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down.

2 Mac. ii. 22.

F R E

Canst thou no other master understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand?

Dryden.

Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart.

Pope.

2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill: with of or from.

It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniences the passions of those meetings gave him, than to dissolve them.

Clarendon.

Hercules

Free'd Erymanthus from the foaming boar. Dryden.
Our land is from the rage of tygers free'd

Dryden's Virgil.

3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.
The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way.

Dryden.

Fierce was the fight; but hast'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover free'd his way.

Dryden.

This master-key

Frees every lock, and leads us to his person.

Dryden.

4. To banish; to send away; to rid. Not in use.

We may again

Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives.

For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Rom. vi. 7.

FREEBO'OTER. n. f. [free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Perkin was not followed by any English of name, his forces consisted mostly of base people and freebooters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom.

Bacon.

The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freebooters as sailed under their commission, taken all the seamen.

Clarendon.

FREEBO'OTING. n. f. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it be may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handsomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and surest friend.

Spenser.

FREE'BORN. n. f. [free and born.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.

O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freeborn brethren of the world!

Dryden.

I shall speak my thoughts like a freeborn subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst.

Dryden's Æneid, Dedication.

Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;

Who from content and custom draw
The same right to be rul'd by law,

Dryden.

Which kings pretend to reign?

FREECHAPPEL. n. f. [free and chappel.] Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation.

Cowel.

FREECOST. n. f. [free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.

We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing.

South.

FREEDMAN. n. f. [free and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman jostles, and will be preferred;
First come, first serv'd, he cries.

Dryden's Juvenal.

FREEDOM. n. f. [from free.]

1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

F R E

The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom.

Spenser on Irish.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inscribe
Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe:
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round.

Dryden's Persius.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.
By our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.
This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.

I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall.

5. Unrestraint.
In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.
The freedom of their state lays them under great necessity of always chusing and doing the best things.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.
FREEFO'OTED. adj. [free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too freefooted!

FREEHEARTED. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal unrestrained.

Love must freehearted be, and voluntary;
And not enchanted, or by fate constrain'd.

FREEHO'LD. n. f. [free and bold.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life. Freehold is deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or foreland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record.

There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give consent.

FREEHO'LDER. n. f. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FREELY. adv. [from free.]

1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependance.

2. Without restraint; heartily; with full gust.

If my son were my husband, I would freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embraces of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Plentifully; lavishly.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains

I have bestowed to breed this present peace, You would drink freely. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

4. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others who themselves excel, And censure freely who have written well. Pope.

5. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Afcham.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show, Thyself may freely on thyself bestow: Fortune was never worshipp'd by the wife; But set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden's Juvenal.

6. Without necessity; without predetermination.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell. Milton.

He leaves us to chuse with the liberty of reasonable beings; they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers.

7. Frankly; liberally; without cost.

By nature all things have an equally common use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bosoms of the universe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneously; of its own accord.

FREEMAN. n. f. [from free and man.] 1. One not a slave; not a vassal. Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakespeare.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worst, be liberty, true liberty, madmen and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent, What nature did like captives treat before. Dryden. What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison on Italy.

FREEMINDED. adj. [from free and mind.] Unperplexed; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon.

FREENESS. n. f. [from free.]

1. The state or quality of being free.

2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuofness; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Spratt.

FREESCHOOL. n. f. [from free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one freeshool at least erected in every diocese. Davies.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small freeshool; a gentleman who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPOKEN. adj. [from free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courses as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, as if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a freespoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

FRESTONE. n. f. [from free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.

Frestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.

I saw her hand; she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakespeare's As you like it.

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison on Italy.

FREETHINKER. n. f. [from free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheist is an old-fashioned word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabric must fall to the ground. Swift's Argument against abolishing Christianity.

FREEWILL. n. f. [from free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without restraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Exo. vii. 13.

FREEWOMAN. n. f. [from free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away; of a freewoman she is become a bondslave. 1 Mac. ii. 11.

TO FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [from frigo, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orpheus with his lute made trees And mountain tops, that freeze, Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Heav'n freezes above severe, the clouds congeal, And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryden.

TO FREEZE. v. a. pret. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

2. To kill by cold.

When we both lay in the field, Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me, Ev'n in his garments! Shakespeare's Richard III.

My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shakespeare.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins, That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Death came on a main, And exercis'd below his iron reign;

Then upward to the seat of life he goes; Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

TO FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted; part. freighted; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [from freitor, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The princes Have to the port of Athens sent their ships, Freight with the ministers and instruments Of cruel war. Shak. Troilus and Cressida, Prolog.

Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these, Who freights a ship to venture on the seas; With one frail interposing plank to save From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryden's Juvenal.

Freighted with iron, from my native land I steer my voyage. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.

I would Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and The freighting souls within her. Shak. Tempest.

FREIGHT. n. f.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded. He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight; The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden's Æneid.

2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FREIGHTER. n. f. [from freteur, French.] He who freights a vessel.

FREN. n. f. A stranger. An old word wholly forgotten here; but retained in Scotland. Beattie.

But now from me his madding mind is start, And woos the widow's daughter of the glen; And now fair Rosalind hath bred his smart, So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spenser's Past.

FRENCH Chalk. n. f.

French Chalk is an indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.

French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as steatites is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone. Woodward.

TO FRENCHIFY. v. a. [from French.] To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb.

They disliked nothing more in king Edward the Confessor than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden's Remains.

Has he familiarly disliked Your yellow starch, or said your doublet Was not exactly Frenchified? Shak. As you like it.

FRENETICK. adj. [from frenetique, French; from frén; generally therefore written phrenetick.] Mad; distracted.

He himself impotent, By means of his frenetick malady. Daniel's Civil War.

Spenser.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto: our Saviour himself and the apostles frequented them.

Hooker.

This fellow here, this thy creature,

By night frequents my house. Shakspeare's Timon.

At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels.

Bacon.

With tears

Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek.

Milton.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent;

And here what I before digested, vent. Denham. That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted.

Dryden.

FREQUENTABLE. adj. [from frequent.] Conversable; accessible. A word not now used, but not inelegant.

While youth lasted in them, the exercises of that age and his humour, not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous.

Sidney.

FREQUENTATIVE. adj. [frequenlatif, French; frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.

FREQUENTER. n. f. [from frequent.] One who often resorts to any place.

I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast;

The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring, And draw thy water from the freshest spring. Prior.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixt with the salt water; so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. Aboel's Description of the World.

3. New; not had before.

No borrowed bays his temples did adorn, But to our crown he did fresh jewels bring. Dryd.

4. New; not impaired by time.

This second source of men, while yet but few, And while the dread of judgment past remain Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity, With some regard to what is just and right, Shall lead their lives. Milton's Paradise Lost.

That love which first was set, will first decay; Mine of a fresher date will longer stay. Dryden's Indian Emperor.

5. In a state like that of recentness.

We will revive those times, and in our memories Preserve and still keep fresh, like flowers in waters. Denham.

With such a care

As roses from their stalks we tear, When we would still preserve them new, And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

Thou sun, said I, fair light!

And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay! Milt.

Think not, 'cause men flutt'ring say, Y'are fresh as April, sweet as May,

Bright as is the morning star, That you are so. Carew.

6. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spirits Palinurus prefs'd; Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest. Dryden's Æneid.

Fresh from the fact, as in the present case, The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;

Stiff in denial, as the law appoints, On engines they distend their tortur'd joints. Dryd.

7. Repaired from any loss or diminution.

Nor lies the long; but, as her fates ordain, Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;

Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

8. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; unfaded; unimpaired.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him; take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore. Bacon's Holy War.

Two swains

Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair. Pope.

9. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.

Tell me,

Hast thou beheld a fresher gentlerwoman, Such war of white and red within her cheeks? Shakspeare.

FRESHLY. adv. [from fresh.]

1. Coolly.

2. Newly; in the former state renewed.

The weeds of heresy being grown into such ripeness as that was, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterwards freshly spring up again, no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker.

Then shall our names, Familiar in their mouths as household words, Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shakspeare's Henry V.

They are now freshly in difference with them. Bacon.

3. With a healthy look; ruddily.

Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled? Shakspeare.

FRESHNESS. n. f. [from fresh.]

1. Newness; vigour; spirit; the contrary to vapidness.

Most odorous smell best broken or crushed; but flowers pressed or beaten, do lose the freshness and sweetness of their odour. Bacon's Natural Hist.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not staleness.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind; for surely no man was ever weary of thinking that he had done well or virtuously. South.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength. The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men. Hayward.

4. Coolness.

There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of Summer; but they be but penning of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them reverberate in circles. Bacon.

Say, if the please; the hither may repair, And breathe the freshness of the open air. Dryden's Aureng.

She laid her down to rest,

And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast, To take the freshness of the morning air. Addison on Italy.

5. Ruddiness; colour of health.

The secret venom, circling in her veins, Works through her skin, and bursts in bloating stains;

Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace, And an unusual paleness spreads her face. Grav.

6. Freedom from saltiness.

FRESHWATER. [A compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.] Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatise those who come first to sea as freshwater men, or novices.

Those nobility, as freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks. Kuoller's History of the Turks.

FRET. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from fretan, to eat; others from prepan, to adorn; some from pgrro; Skinner more probably from fremo, or the French fretter: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fretum.]

1. A frith, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores. Brown.

2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

Of this river the surface is covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones that oppose its passage. Addison on Italy.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret, dischargeth itself of heterogeneous mixtures. Derham.

3. That stop of the musical instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note; and, in the tops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon's Natural History.

The harp

Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice Choral or unison. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute. Cress's Cosmologia Sac.

4. Work rising in protuberances.

The frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; where unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon's Natural History.

We take delight in a prospect well laid out, and diversified with fields and meadows, woods and rivers, in the curious fret works of rocks and grottos. Spectator.

5. Agitation of the mind: commotion of the temper; passion.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets,
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.

The incredulous Pheac, having yet Drank but one round, reply'd in sober fret. Tate's Juvenal.

You, too weak, the slightest loss to bear,
Are on the fret of passion, boil and rage. Creech's Juvenal.

Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;
I never answer'd, I was not in debt. Pope.

To FRET. v. a. [from the noun.]
1 To agitate violently by external impulse or action.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakespeare.

2. To wear away by rubbing.

Drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth. Shakespeare's Richard II.

In the banks of rivers, with the washing of the water, there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold. Abbot.

Before I ground the object metal on the pitch, I always ground the putty on it with the concave copper, 'till it had done making a noise; because, if the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton's Opticks.

3. To hurt by attrition.

Antony
Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear
Of what he has and has not. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

4. To corrode; to eat away.

It is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without. Leviticus, xiii. 55.

The painful husband, plowing up his ground,
Shall find all fret with rust, both pikes and shields,
And empty helms under his harrow found. Hakewill.

Cornice or freeze, with bossy sculptures grav'n;
The roof was fretted gold. Milton's Paradise Lost.

6. To variegate; to diversify.

Yon grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

7. To make angry; to vex.

The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chosen thou hast; and they that overween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth. Milton.
Because thou hast fretted me in all these things, behold I will recompence thy way upon thine head. Ezekiel, xvi. 43.

Such an expectation, cries one, will never come to pass: therefore I'll even give it up, and go and fret myself. Collier.

Injuries from friends fret and gall more, and the memory of them is not so easily obliterated. Arbushnot's History of John Bull.

To FRET. v. n.

1. To be in commotion; to be agitated.
No benefits whatsoever shall ever alter or allay that diabolical rancour, that frets and ferments in some hellish breasts, but that it will foam out in slander and invective. South.

Th' adjoining brook, that puris along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
Now scarcely moving through a reedy pool. Thomson's Summer.

2. To be worn away; to be corroded.

Take a piece of gloves leather that is very thin, and put your gold therein, with sal armoniack, binding it close, and then hang it up: the sal armoniack will fret away, and the gold remain behind. Peascham on Drawing.

3. To make way by attrition or corrosion.

These do but indeed scrape off the exuberances, or fret into the wood, and therefore they are very seldom used to soft wood. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

It inflamed and swelled very much; many wheals arose, and fretted one into another with great excoriation. Wise-man.

4. To be angry; to be peevish; to vex himself.
They trouble themselves with fretting at the ignorance of such as withstand them in their opinion. Hooker.

We are in a fretting mind at the church of Rome, and with angry disposition enter into cogitation. Hooker.

Helpless, what it may boot
To fret for anger, or for grief to moan! Fairy Queen.

Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Be lion-mettled, proud, and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

His heart fretted against the Lord. Prov. xix. 3.

Conquest should be so long a getting,
Drew up his force. Hudibras.

He swells with wrath, he makes outrageous moan,
He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground. Dryden.

How should I fret to mangle ev'ry line,
In reverence to the sins of thirty-nine. Pope.

FRETFUL. adj. [from fret.] Angry; peevish; in a state of vexation.

Thy knotty and combined locks to part,
And each particular hair to stand on end,

A fribbler is one who professes rapture for the woman, and dreads her consent. Spectator.

FRIASSE. n. f. [French.] A dish made by cutting chickens or other small things in pieces, and dressing them with strong sauce.

Oh, how would Homer praise their dancing dogs,
Their stinking cheese, and fricaty of frogs!

He'd raise no fables, sing no flagrant lye,
Of boys with custard choak'd at Newberry. King.

FRICTION. n. f. [fricatio, Latin.] The act of rubbing one thing against another.

Gentle friction draweth forth the nourishment, by making the parts a little hungry, and heating them: this friction I wish to be done in the morning. Bacon's Natural History.

Refinous or unctuous bodies, and such as will flame, attract vigorously, and most thereof without friction, as good hard wax, which will convert the needle almost as actively as the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FRICTION. n. f. [friction, Fr. friccion, from frico, Latin.]

1. The act of rubbing two bodies together.

Do not all bodies which abound with terrestrial parts, and especially with sulphureous ones, emit light as often as those parts are sufficiently agitated, whether the agitation be made by heat, friction, percussion, putrefaction, or by any vital motion? Newton's Optics.

2. The resistance in machines caused by the motion of one body upon another.

3. Medical rubbing with the fleshbrush or cloaths.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see both in men and in the currying of horses; for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits to the parts. Bacon.

FRI'DAY. n. f. [frige dæg, Saxon.] The sixth day of the week, so named of Freya, a Saxon deity.

An' she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. Shakespeare's Othello.

For

For Venus, like her day, will change her cheer,
And seldom shall we see a Friday clear. Dryden.

The bounds, and seek some other self, a friend. Dryden.

2. One without hostile intentions.
Who comes so fast in silence of the night?
—A friend.
—What friend? your name?

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

3. One reconciled to another: this is put by the custom of the language somewhat irregularly in the plural number.

He's friends with Cæsar,
In state of health thou say'st, and thou say'st free. Shakespeare.

My son came then into my mind; and yet my mind
Was then scarce friends with him. Shakespeare's King Lear.

If she repent, and would make me amends,
Bid her but fend me hers, and we are friends. Carew.

4. An attendant, or companion.
The king adorns their entrance, and ascends
His regal seat, surrounded by his friends. Dryden's Æneid.

5. Favourer, one propitious.
Aurora riding upon Pegasus, sheweth her swiftness, and how she is a friend to poetry and all ingenious inventions. Peacocks.

6. A familiar compellation.
Friend, how camest thou in hither? Matthew, xxii. 12.

What supports me, do'st thou ask?
The confidence, friend, I have lost mine eyes o'er-ply'd
In liberty's defence. Milton.

To FRIEND. v. a. [from the noun.] To favour;
to befriend; to countenance; to support.

I know that we shall have him well to friend. Shakespeare.

When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,
That, for the fault's love, is th' offender friend. Shakespeare.

FRIENDLESS. adj. Well disposed; inclined to love.

Not friendless by his wish to your high person,
His will is most malignant, and it stretches
Beyond you to your friends. Shakespeare.

FRIENDLESS. adj. [from friend.]
1. Wanting friends; wanting support; without countenance; destitute; forlorn.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Woe to him that is alone, is verified upon none
so much as upon the friendless person. South.

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,
Oh friendless and forsaken virtue fly. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

To what new clime, what distant sky,
Forsaken, friendless, will ye fly? Pope.

2. FRIENDLESS. Man. The Saxon word for him whom we call an outlaw, because he was, upon his exclusion from the king's peace and protection, denied all help of friends.

FRIENDLINESS. n. f. [from friendly.]
1. A disposition to friendship.

Such a liking and friendliness as hath brought forth the effects. Sidney.

Of brutal kind? Milton's Paradise Lost.

Let the Nassau-star in rising majesty appear,
And guide the prosperous mariner
With everlasting beams of friendly light. Prior.

2. Disposed to union; amicable.
Like friendly colours found our hearts unite,
And each from each contract new strength and light. Pope.

3. Salutory; homogeneal.
Not that Nepenthe, which the wife of Thone
In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,
Is of such power to stir up joy as this,
To life so friendly, or so cool to thirst. Milton.

FRIENDLY. adv. In the manner of friends; with appearance of kindness; amicably.

Here between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace;
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home
Of our restored love and amity. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FRIENDSHIP. n. f. [friendship, Dutch.]
1. The state of minds united by mutual benevolence; amity.

There is little friendship in the world, and least of all between equals, which was wont to be magnified: that that is, is between superior and inferior, whose fortunes may comprehend the one the other. Bacon.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence than any friendship with the favourites. Clarendon.

2. Highest degree of intimacy.
My sons, let your unseemly discord cease,
If not in friendship, live at least in peace. Dryden's Indian Emperor.

3. Favour; personal kindness.
His friendships, still to few confin'd,
Were always of the middling kind. Swift.

Raw captains are usually sent only preferred by friendship, and not chosen by sufficiency. Spenser on Ireland.

4. Assistance; help.
Gracious, my lord, hard-by here is a hovel:
Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest;
Repose you there. Shakespeare's King Lear.

5. Conformity; affinity; correspondence; aptness to unite.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, in mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FRIEZE. n. f. [drap de frise, French.] A coarse warm cloth, made perhaps first in Friesland.

If all the world
Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,
The All-giver would be unthank'd. Milton.

The captive Germans of gigantick frieze,
Are rank'd in order, and are clad in frieze. Dryden's Perseus.

He could no more live without his frieze coat than without his skin. Addison's Guardian.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frieze;
As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

FRIEZE. n. f. [In architecture.] A large flat frize, member which separates the architrave from the cornice; of which there are as many kinds as there are orders of columns. Harris.

No jutting frieze,

Buttrice, nor coigne of 'vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant-bed, and procreant cradle. Shakespeare.

Nor did there want
Cornice or frieze with bossy sculptures grav'n;
The roof was fretted gold. Milton's Par. Lost.

Polydore designed admirably well, as to the practical part, having a particular genius for friezes. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FRIEZED. adj. [from frieze.] Shagged or naped with frieze.

Behold the water work and play
About her little frigate therein making way. Fairy Queen.

FRIGEFACITION. n. f. [frigus and facio, Latin.] The act of making cold.

To FRIGHT. v. a. [fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to disturb with fear; to shock with fear; to daunt; to dismay. This was in the old authors more frequently written affright, as it is always found in the Scripture.

The herds
Were strongly clamorous in the frighted fields. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Such a numerous host Fled not in silence through the frighted deep,
With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
Confusion was confounded. Milton.

Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life. Milton.

Nor exile or danger can fright a brave spirit,
With innocence guarded,
With virtue rewarded,
I make of my sufferings a merit. Dry. Albion.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross, and at a distance; things thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty. Locke.

Whence glaring oft with many a broaden'd orb,
He frights the nations. Thomson's Autumn.

FRIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.] A sudden terror.

You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
May think I broke all hospitable laws,
To bear you from your palace-yard by might,
And put your noble person in a fright. Dryden.

To FRIGHTEN. v. a. To terrify; to shock with dread.

The rugged bear's, or spotted lynx's brood,
Frighten the valleys and infest the wood. Prior.

FRIGHTFUL. adj. [from fright.]
1. Terrible; dreadful; full of terror.
Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy,
Thy schooldays frightful, desp'rate, wild, and furious. Shakespeare.

Without aid you durst not undertake
This frightful passage o'er the Stygian lake. Dryden's Æneid.

2. A cant word among women for any thing unpleasant.

Peg faints at the sound of an organ, and yet will dance and frisk at the noise of a bagpipe.

Arbutb. Hist. of John Bull.

Sly hunters thus, in Borneo's isle,

To catch a monkey by a wile,

The mimic animal amuse;

They place before him gloves and shoes;

Which when the brute puts aukward on,

All his agility is gone:

In vain to frisk or climb he tries;

The huntmen seize the grinning prize.

Swift.

FRISK. n. f. [from the verb.] A frolick; a fit of wanton gaiety.

FRISKER. n. f. [from frisk.] A wanton; one not constant or settled.

Now I will wear this, and now I will wear that;

Now I will wear I cannot tell what;

All new fashions be pleasant to me:

Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;

What should I do but fet cock on the hoop?

Camden.

FROLICK. adj. [vrolijk, Dutch.] Gay; full of levity; full of pranks.

We fairies, that do run

By the triple Hecate's team,

From the preference of the sun,

Following darkness like a dream,

Now are frolick. Shak. Mid. Night's Dream.

Whether, as some fages sing,

The frolick wind that breathes the Spring,

Zephyr with Aurora playing,

As he met her once a Maying;

There on beds of violets blue,

And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,

Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,

So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire. Milton.

Who ripe, and frolick of his full-grown age,

Roving the Celtick and Iberian fields,

At last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milt.

The gay, the frolick, and the loud. Waller.

FROLICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A wild prank; a flight of whim and levity.

He would be at his frolick once again,

And his pretensions to divinity. Roscommon.

Alcibiades, having been formerly noted for the like frolicks and excursions, was immediately accused of this. Swift.

While rain depends, the pensive cat gives o'er

Her frolicks, and pursues her tail no more. Swift.

To FROLICK. v. n. [from the noun.] To play wild pranks; to play tricks of levity and gaiety.

Manly spirit and genius plays not tricks with words, nor frolicks with the caprices of a frothy imagination. Granville.

I thus would play and trifle with your reverence.

Did you draw bonds to forfeit? Sign, to break?

Or must we read you quite from what we speak,

And find the truth out the wrong way?

20. Noting removal.

Thrice from the ground she leap'd.

21. From is very frequently joined by an ellipsis with adverbs: as from above, from the parts above;

from below, from the places below; of which some are here exemplified.

22. From above.

He, which gave them from above such power, for miraculous confirmation of that which they taught, endued them also with wisdom from above, to teach that which they so did confirm.

No sooner were his eyes in slumber bound,

When, from above, a more than mortal sound

Invades his ears.

23. From afar.

Light demilances from afar they throw.

24. From beneath.

With whirlwinds from beneath the tofs'd the ship,

And bare expos'd the bosom of the deep.

An arm arises out of Stygian flood,

Which, breaking from beneath with bellowing found,

Whirls the black waves and rattling stones around.

25. From behind.

See, to their base restor'd, earth, seas, and air,

And joyful ages from behind, in crowding ranks appear.

26. From far.

Their train, proceeding on their way,

From far the town and lofty tow'rs survey.

27. From

27. FROM high.

Then heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high.
Dryden.

28. FROM thence. Here from is superfluous.
In the necessary differences which arise from thence, they rather break into several divisions than join in any one publick interest; and from thence have always risen the most dangerous factions, which have ruined the peace of nations. Clarendon.

29. FROM whence. From is here superfluous.
While future realms his wand'ring thoughts del-
light,

His daily vision, and his dream by night,
Forbidden Thebes appears before his eye,
From whence he sees his absent brother fly.

Pope's Statius.

30. FROM where.

From where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendant woods,

Us to these shores our filial duty draws. Pope's Ody.

31. FROM without.

When the plantation grows to strength, then it is time to plant it with women as well as with men, that it may spread into generations, and not be pieced from without. Bacon.

If native power prevail not, shall I doubt
To seek for needful succour from without.

Dryden's Æneid.

32. From is sometimes followed by another preposition, with its proper case.

33. FROM amidst.

Thou too shalt fall by time or barb'rous foes,
Whose circling walls the few'n fam'd hills enclose;
And thou, whose rival tow'rs invade the skies,
And, from amidst the waves, with equal glory rise.

Addison.

34. FROM among.

Here had new begun
My wand'ring, had not he, who was my guide,
Up hither, from among the trees appear'd,
Prefence divine! Milton's Paradise Lost.

55. FROM beneath.

My worthy wife our arms mislaid,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd.

Dryden's Æneid.

36. FROM beyond.

There followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from beyond Jordan. Matt. iv. 25.

37. FROM forth.

Young Aretus, from forth his bridal bower,
Brought the full laver o'er their hands to pour,
And canisters of consecrated flour. Pope's Odyf.

38. FROM off.

The sea being constrained to withdraw from off certain tracts of lands, which lay till then at the bottom of it. Woodward.

Knights, unhors'd, may rise from the plain,
And fight on foot, their honour to regain. Dryden.

39. FROM out.

The king with angry threatnings from out a window, where he was not ashamed the world should behold him a beholder, commanded his guard and the rest of his soldiers to hasten their death. Sidney.

And join thy voice unto the angel-quire,
From out his secret altar touch'd with hallow'd fire.

Milton.

Now shake, from out thy fruitful breast, the seeds
Of envy, discord, and of cruel deeds.

Dryden's Æneid.

Strong god of iron, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing North and hyperborean seas, Terror is thine; and wild amazement, flung
From out thy chariot, withers ev'n the strong. Dryd.

40. FROM out of.

Whatsoever such principles there is, it was at the first found out by discourse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth. Hooker.

41. FROM under.

He, though blind of sight,
Despis'd, and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His fiery virtue rous'd
From under ashes into sudden flame.

Milton's Agonistes.

42. FROM within.From within

The broken bowels, and the bloated skin,
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms.

Dryden's Virg. Georg.

FROMWARD. prep. [fram and peap'd, Saxon.]
Away from; the contrary to the word towards.
Not now in use.

As cheerfully going towards as Pyrocles went forward fromward his death. Sidney.

The horizontal needle is continually varying towards East and West; and so the dipping or inclining needle is varying up and down, towards or fromward the zenith. Cheyne.

FRONTIFEROUS. adj. [frondifer, Lat.] Bearing leaves. Dict.

FRONT. n. f. [front, Latin; front, French.]

1. The face.

His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.

They stand not front to front, but each doth view
The other's tail, pursu'd as they pursue.

Creech's Manilius.

The patriot virtues that distend thy thought,
Spread on thy front, and in thy bosom glow.

Thomson.

2. The face, in a sense of censure or dislike: as, a hardened front; a fierce front. This is the usual sense.

3. The face is opposed to an enemy.

His forward hand, inur'd to wounds, makes way

Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce. Daniel.

4. The part or place opposed to the face.

The access of the town was only by a neck of land: our men had shot that thundered upon them from the rampier in front, and from the gallies that lay at sea in flank. Bacon.

5. The van of an army.

'Twixt host and host but narrow space was left,
A dreadful interval! and front to front
Presented, stood in terrible array.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

6. The forepart of any thing, as of a building.
Both these sides are not only returns, but parts of the front; and uniform without, though severally partitioned within, and are on both sides of a great and stately tower, in the midst of the front.

Bacon's Essays.

Palladius adviseth the front of his edifice should so respect the South, that in its first angle it receive the rising rays of the Winter sun, and decline a little from the Winter setting thereof.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The prince approach'd the door,
Possess'd the porch, and on the front above
He fix'd the fatal bough. Dryden's Æneid.

One sees the front of palaces covered with painted pillars of different orders. Addison on Italy.

7. The most conspicuous part or particular.
To FRONT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To oppose directly, or face to face; to encounter.

You four shall front them in the narrow lane;
we will walk lower: if they 'scape from your encounter then they light on us.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Can you, when you have push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, think to front his revenges with easy groans. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Some are either to be won to the state in a fast and true manner, or fronted with some other of the same party that may oppose them, and so divide the reputation. Bacon's Essays.

I shall front thee, like some starting ghost,
With all my wrongs about me.

Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. To stand opposed or over against any place or thing.

The square will be one of the most beautiful in Italy when this statue is erected, and a townhouse built at one end to front the church that stands at the other. Addison on Italy.

To FRONT. v. n. To stand foremost.

I front but in that file,

Where others tell steps with me.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

FRONTAL. n. f. [frontale, Latin; frontal, Fr.]

Any external form of medicine to be applied to the forehead, generally composed amongst the ancients of coolers and hypnoticks. Quincy.

We may apply intercipients upon the temples of maddock: frontales may also be applied.

Wise man's Surgery.

The Torpedo, alive, stupifies at a distance; but after death produceth no such effect; which had they retained, they might have supplied opium, and served as frontals in phrenesies.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FRONTATED. adj. [from frons, Latin.] In botany, the frontated leaf of a flower grows broader and broader, and at last perhaps terminates in a right line: used in opposition to cupated, which is, when the leaves of a flower end in a point.

Quincy.

FRONTBOX. n. f. [front and box.] The box in the playhouse from which there is a direct view to the stage.

How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains!
That men may say, when we the frontbox grace,
Behold the first in virtue, as in face. Pope.

FRONTED. adj. [from front.] Formed with a front.

Part fronted brigades form.

FRONTIER. n. f. [frontier, Fr.] The marches; the limit; the utmost verge of any territory; the border; properly that which terminates not at the sea, but fronts another country.

Draw all the inhabitants of those borders away, or plant garriisons upon all those frontiers about him. Spenser on Ireland.

I upon my frontiers here keep residence,
That little which is left so to defend. Milton.

FRONTIER. adj. Bordering; conterminous.

A place there lies on Gallia's utmost bounds,
Where rising seas insult the frontier grounds.

Addison.

FRONTISPIECE. n. f. [frontispicium, id quod in fronte conspicitur; frontispiece, French.] That part of any building or other body that directly meets the eye.

With frontispiece of diamond and gold
Embellish'd thick with sparkling orient gems
The portal shone. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Who is it has informed that a rational soul can inhabit no tenement, unless it has just such a sort of frontispiece? Locke.

The frontispiece of the townhouse has pillars of a beautiful black marble, streaked with white.

Addison on Italy.

FRONTLESS. adj. [from front.] Not blushing;
wanting shame; void of diffidence.

Thee, frontless man, we follow'd from afar,
Thy instruments of death and tools of war.

Dryden's Iliad.

For vice, though frontless and of harden'd face,
Is daunted at the sight of awful grace. Dryden.

Strike a blush through frontless flatery. Pope.

FRONTLET. n. f. [from frons, Latin; frontale,
French.] A bandage worn upon the forehead.
How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet
on? You are too much of late i' th' frown.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

They shall be as frontlets between thine eyes.
Deuteronomy, vi. 8.

To the forehead frontlets were applied, to restrain and intercept the influx. Wise man's Surgery.

FRONTROOM. n. f. [front and room.] An apartment in the forepart of the house.

If your shop stands in an eminent street, the frontrooms are commonly more airy than the back-rooms; and it will be inconvenient to make the frontroom shallow. Maxon.

FRORE. Adj. [levroren, Dutch, frozen.] Frozen.
This word is not used since the time of Milton.

The parching air
Burns froze, and cold performs th' effect of fire.

Milton.

FRORNE. adj. [bevroren, Frozen, Dutch.] Frozen;
congealed with cold. Obsolete.

O, my heart-blood is well nigh forne I feel,
And my galage grown fast to my heel.

Spenser's Pastoral.

FRO

FROST. n. f. [frore, Saxon.]

1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more waterish parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. South.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost. Pope's Winter.

FROSTBITTEN. adj. [frost and bitten.] Nipped or withered by the frost.

The leaves are too much frostbitten. Mortimer.

FROSTED. adj. [from frost.] Laid on in inequalities like those of the hoar frost upon plants.

The rich brocaded silk unfold,
Where rising flows grow stiff with frosted gold. Gay.

FROSTILY. adv. [from frosty.]

1. With frost; with excessive cold.

2. Without warmth of affection.

Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily. Ben Jonson.

FROSTINESS. n. f. [from frosty.] Cold; freezing cold.

FROSTNAIL. n. f. [frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, that it may pierce the ice.

The claws are strait only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frost-nails. Grew's Cosmol.

FROSTWORK. n. f. [frost and work.] Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.

By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,
Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze. Blackmore.

FROSTY. adj. [from frost.]

1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd
Be pitiful to my condemned fons. Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire scorseth in frosty weather. Bacon.

A gnat, half-starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive. L'Estrange.

2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.

What a frosty spirited rogue is this. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

3. Hoary; grey-haired; resembling frost.

Where is loyalty?

If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth? Shakespeare's Henry VI.

FROTH. n. f. [froe, Danish and Scottish.]

1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

His hideous tail then hurled he about,
And therewith all enwrap the nimble thighs
Of his frothy foamy steed. Fairy Queen.

When the wind expireth from under the sea,
as it causeth some refounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Natural History.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain battery, and in froth of bubbles end. Milton's Paradise Regained.

The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters. Glanv.

FRO

The scatter'd ocean flies;

Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dryden.

They were the froth my raging folly mov'd
When it boild up; I knew not then I lov'd, Yet then lov'd most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness. Newton.

A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bent. Ser.

2. Any empty or senseless shew of wit or eloquence.

3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.
Who eateth his veal, pig or lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tusser.

TO FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam;
to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryd. Don Sebastian.
Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.

FROTHILY. adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam; with spume.

2. In an empty trifling manner.

FROTHY. adj. [from frothy.]

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears: some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; wafting.

Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy. Bacon's Natural History.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson.

FROUNCE. n. f. A word used by falconers for a disemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill. Skinner.

TO FROUNCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To friz-zle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Fairy Queen.

Some warlike sign must be used; there a slovenly buskin, or an overfaring frounced head. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Thus, night oft see me in thy pale career,
'Till civil suited morn appear;
Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.

FROUZY. adj. [A cant word.]

1. Fetid; musty.

Petticoats in frouzy heaps. Swift.

2. Dim; cloudy.

When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her looks disgrace!
A frouzy dirty-coloured red Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift.

FROWARD. adj. [frowpeard, Saxon.] Peevish; ungovernable; angry; perverse; the contrary to toward.

FRO

The froward pain of mine own heart made me delight to punish, whom I esteemed him the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.

She's not froward, but modest as the dove;
She is not hot, but temperate as the roe. Shakespeare.

Whose ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths. Prov. ii. 15.

Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon's Essays.

'Tis with froward men, and froward factions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be sooner quieted by fear than by any sense of duty. L'Estrange.

Motions occasion to sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles. Temple.

FROWARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Peevishly;
perverfly.

I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly in the way of his heart. Is. lvii. 17.

FROWARDNESS. n. f. [from froward.] Peevishness; perverseness.

How many frowardnesses of ours does he smother?
how many indignities does he pass by? how many affronts does he put up at our hands? South.

We'll mutually forget
The warmth of youth, and frowardness of age. Addison's Cat.

FROWER. n. f. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath. Tusser.

TO FROWN. v. a. [frowner, old French, to wrinkle. Skinner.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that the frowns; I'll say, the looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakespeare.

They chuse their magistrat;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet
on? You are too much of late i'th' frown.

—Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst
no need to care for her frowning. Shakespeare's Lear.
Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.

The wood,
Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Wav'd high, and frown'd upon the stream below. Pope.

FROWN. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour. Knoles's History of the Turks.

In his half-clos'd eyes
Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.

FROWNINGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly;
with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?

A countenance more in sorrow than in anger. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

FROWY. adj. Musty; mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it frouzy.

But if they with thy gotes should yede,
They soon might be corrupted;
Or like not of the frowy fede,
Or with the weeds be glutted. Spenser's Past.

FROZEN. part. pass. of freeze.

1. Congealed with cold.

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms Shook Asia's crown with European arms?
E'en such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea. Dryden's Æneid.

Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth
To invade the frozen waggon of the North. Dryden's Ovid.

A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

2. Chill

FRU

2. Chill in affection.
Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen
In despair; but the armour naturally representing ice, and all his furniture lively answering thereto.
Sidney.

Be not ever frozen, coy;
One beam of love will soon destroy
And melt that ice to floods of joy. Carew.
3. Void of heat or appetite.
Even here, where frozen charity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.
F. R. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.
Who vintu profess,

Shine in the dignity of F. R. S. Pope.
FRUCTIFEROUS. adj. [fructifer, Lat.] Bearing fruit. Ainsworth.

To FRUCTIFY. v. a. [fructifier, French.] To make fruitful; to fertilize.
The legal levies the sovereign raises are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth.
Howell's Vocal Forest.

Where'er the looks, behold some sudden birth
Adorn the trees, and fructifies the earth. Glanv.
To FRUCTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.

It wavereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and ferveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life. Hooker.
Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontally to the poles. Brown.

FRUCTIFICATION. n. f. [from fructify.] The act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation;
fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch-tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errors

FRUCTUOUS. adj. [fructueux, French; from fructif.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn
Oft interlac'd occur; and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound!
Philips.

FRUGAL. adj. [frugalis, Latin; frugal, Fr.]
Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal;
not profuse; not lavish.

Reasoning, I oft admire,
How nature wife and frugal could commit
Such disproportions, with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater so manifold to this one use. Milton.
And wing'd purveyors his sharp hunger fed
With frugal scraps of flesh and mallow bread.
Harte.

If through mists he shoots his fullen beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams,
Suspect a drifling day. Dryden's Virgil.

FRUGALITY. adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

Mean time young Pafimond his marriage press'd,
And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun,
To join his brother's bridal with his own. Dryden.
FRUGALITY. n. f. [frugalité, French; frugalitas, Latin.] Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink. Bacon.

Frugality and bounty too
Those differing virtues, meet in you. Waller.

In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony. Arbutnot's John Bull.

FRUCTIFEROUS. adj. [fructifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit. Ainsworth.

FRUIT. n. f. [fructus, Latin; frwyth, Welsh; fruit, French.]

FRU

1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality.
Shakespeare's Henry V.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.
By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they fought knowledge, they did error find.
Davies.

See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,
Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own.
Blackmore.

3. Production,
The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth. Ephes. v. 9.

4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.
Can't thou their reck'nings keep? the time
compute,
When their swollen bellies shall enlarge the fruit.
Sandys.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.
What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories? Where are the fruits of them at this day?
Or of what benefit will they be to posterity? Swift.

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which shall be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.
She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale when she remembered the fruit of denying. Sidney.

They shall eat of the fruit of their own way.
Proverbs.

FRUITAGE. n. f. [fruitage, French.] Fruit collectively; various fruits.
In heav'n the trees
Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines Yield nectar. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Greedily they pluck'd
The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew
Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flam'd.
Milton.

What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work? More.

FRUITBEARER. n. f. [fruit and bearer.] That which produces fruit.
Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FRUITBEARING. adj. [fruit and bear.] Having the quality of producing fruit.
By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not. Mortimer.

FRUITERER. n. f. [fruitier, French.] One who trades in fruit.
I did fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Walnuts the fruit'er's hand in Autumn stain;
Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment his gain.
Gay.

FRUITERY. n. f. [fruiterie, French.]
1. Fruit collectively taken.
Oft, notwithstanding all thy care
To help thy plants, on the small fruitery
Exempt from ills, an oriental blait Disastrous flies. Philips.

2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.
FRUITFUL. adj. [fruit and full.]

1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of vegetable product.
If the continued cruel, he could no more suf-tain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence. Sidney.

The Earth,
Though in comparison of Heav'n, so small,
Nor glitt'ring, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth. Milton.

2. Actually bearing fruit.

FRU

Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.
Shakespeare.

3. Prolifick; childbearing; not barren.
Hear, Nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father!

Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend
To make this creature fruitful:
Into her womb convey sterility. Shak. King Lear.

Male he created thee, but thy comfort
Female for race; then blest'd mankind, and said,
Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the Earth;
Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold. Milton.

I have copied Nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful.
Gay's Preface to the What d'ye Call it.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.
While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's publick posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays. Addison.

FRUITFULLY. adv. [from fruitful.]
1. In such a manner as to be prolifick.
How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,
And purer fire through universal night,
And empty space did fruitfully unite. Roscommon.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.
You have many opportunities to cut him off:
if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. Shakespeare.

FRUITFULNESS. n. f. [from fruitful.]
1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.
Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood. Raleigh's History.

2. The quality of being prolifick, or bearing many children.
The goddess, present at the match she made,
So blest'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten months had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born.
Dryden's Ovid.

3. Exuberant abundance.
The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary: I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for.
Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

FRUIT GROVES. n. f. [fruit and groves.] Shades, or close plantations of fruit trees.

The faithful slave,
Whom to my nuptial train Icarus gave,
To tend the fruitgroves. Pope's Odyssey.

FRUITION. n. f. [fruit, Latin.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.
Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruit of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as advance him most deservedly in estimation. Hooker.

I am driv'n, by breath of her renown,
Either to seek shipwreck, or to arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Ev'n all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave.
Sandys's Paraphrase.

Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,
Naked and unadorn'd, could find success;
'Till by fruition, novelty destroy'd,
The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd.
Granville.

Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of men consists:
if the affliction be on his body, his appetites are weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed.
Rogers's Sermons.

FRUITIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Enjoying; possessing; having the power of enjoyment. A word not legitimate.

To whet our longings for fruitive or experimental knowledge, it is reserved among the prerogatives of being in heaven, to know how happy we shall be, when there. Byle.

FRUIT-

FRU

FRUITLESS. adj. [from fruit.]
1. Barren of fruit; not bearing fruit.
The Spaniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear feed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless. Raleigh's History.

2. Vain; productive of no advantage; idle; unprofitable.

O! let me not, quoth he, return again
Back to the world, whose joys so fruitless are;
But let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or straightway on that last long voyage fare.

Serpent! we might have spar'd our coming hither;
Fruitless to me, though fruit be here 't' excess.

The other is for entirely waving all searches into antiquity, in relation to this controversy, as being either needless or fruitless.

3. Having no offspring.
Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And but a barren sceptre in my gripe;
No son of mine succeeding.

FRUITLESSLY. adv. [from fruitless.] Vainly; idly; unprofitably.

After this fruit curiosity fruitlessly enquireth, and confidence blindly determineth.
Walking they talk'd, and fruitlessly divin'd
What friend the priests by those words design'd.

FRUIT-TIME. n. f. [from fruit and time.] The Autumn; the time for gathering fruit.

FRUIT-TREE. n. f. [from fruit and tree.] A tree of that kind whose principal value arises from the fruit produced by it.

Lady, by yonder blessed moon I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops.

They possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards and oliveyards, and fruit-trees in abundance.

All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound.

FRUMENTACIOUS. adj. [from frumentum, Lat.] Made of grain.

FRUMENTY. n. f. [from frumentum, corn, Latin.] Food made of wheat boiled in milk.

TO FRUMP. v. a. To mock; to browbeat.

TO FRUSH. v. a. [from frösch, French.] To break, bruise, or crush.

I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it.

FRUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] A fort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe: it divides into two branches, running towards the heel, in the form of a fork.

FRUSTRA'NEOUS. adj. [from frustra, Lat.] Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage.

Their attempts being so frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so perspicuous, it is a marvel that any man should be zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it.

He timely withdraws his frustraneous baffled kindnesses, and fees the folly of endeavouring to stroke a tyger into a lamb, or to court an Ethiopian out of his colour.

TO FRUSTRATE. v. a. [from frustror, Latin; frustrer, French.]

1. To defeat; to disappoint; to balk.
It is an axiom of nature, that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrate.

To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out Rotten opinion.

Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will;
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill.

Not more almighty to resist our might,
Than wife to frustrate all our plots and wiles.

FRY

2. To make null; to nullify.
The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances.

Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam: and by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,
And frustrate the conquest fraudulent.
The peculiar strength of the motive may of itself perhaps contribute to frustrate the efficacy of it, rendering it liable to be suspected by him to whom it is addressed.

FRUSTRATE. participial adj. [from the verb.] 1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.

Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land.

The ruler of the province of Judea being by Julian busied in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and oft confusing the workmen, made the enterprise frustrate.

All at once employ their thronging darts;
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design.

2. Null; void.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that, the fame being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate.

FRUSTRATION. n. f. [from frustratio, Latin; from frustrate.] Disappointment; defeat.

In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power countermands their deepest projects, splits their counsels, and smites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse.

FRUSTRATIVE. adj. [from frustrate.] Fallacious; disappointing.

FRUSTRATORY. adj. [from frustrate.] That which makes any procedure void; that which vacates any former process.

Bartolus restrains this to a frustratory appeal.

FRUSTRUM. n. f. [Latin.] A piece cut off from a regular figure. A term of science.

FRY. n. f. [from froe, foam, Danish. Skinner.] 1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.

They come to us, but as love draws;
He swallows us, and never chaws:

By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks do die;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry.

Forthwith the sounds and seas, each creek and bay,
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals

Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave in sculls, that oft

Bank the mid-foe.

The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fry.

So close behind some promontory lie
The huge leviathans, 't' attend their prey;

And give no chase, but swallow in the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way.

2. Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.

Out of the fry of these rakehell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kern continually supplied and maintained.

Them before the fry of children young,
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens founding timbrels sung.

Draw me no constellations there,
Nor dog, nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;
Nor any of that monstrous fry

Of animals that stock the sky.

The young fry must be held at a distance, and kept under the discipline of contempt.

FRY. n. f. A kind of sieve.

He dresseth the dust from malt, by running it through a fan or fry.

TO FRY. v. a. [from frigo, Lat. frio, Welsh; frijick,

TO FRY. v. n.
1. To be roasted in a pan on the fire.

2. To suffer the action of fire.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;

Above the brims they force their fiery way,
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.

3. To melt with heat.

Spices and gums about them melting fry,
And, phenix like, in that rich nest they die.

4. To be agitated like liquor in the pan on the fire.

Oil of sweet almonds, newly drawn with sugar, and a little spice, spread upon bread toasted, is an excellent nourisher; but then, to keep the oil from frying in the stomach, drink mild beer after it.

Where no ford he finds, no water fries,
Nor billows with unequal murmurs roar,
But smoothly slide along, and swell the shoar,

That course he steer'd.

FRY. n. f. [from the verb.] A dish of things fried.

FRYING-PAN. n. f. [from fry and pan.] The vessel in which meat is roasted on the fire.

If I pass by sea, I may chance to fall from the frying-pan into the fire.

We understand by out of the frying-pan into the fire, that things go from bad to worse.

A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street with the twanking of a brass kettle or a frying-pan.

TO FUB. v. a. To put off; to delay by false pretences; to cheat. It is generally written fob.

A hundred marks is a long lone for a poor lone woman to bear? and I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have been fubb'd off and fubb'd off from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on.

FUB. n. f. A plump chubby boy.

FUCATED. adj. [from fucatus, Latin.] 1. Painted; disguised with paint.

2. Disguised by false show.

FUCUS. n. f. [Latin.] Paint for the face. Not now in use.

bellies. Swift's Directions to the Groom.

10. Containing the whole matter; expressing much.

Where my expressions are not so full as his, either our language or my art were defective; but where mine are fuller than his, they are but the impressions which the often reading of him have left upon my thoughts. Denham.

Should a man go about with never so fet study to describe such a natural form of the year before the deluge as that which is at present established, he could scarcely do it in so few words, so fit and proper, so full and express. Woodward.

11. Strong; not faint; not attenuated.
I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart; but the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Shakespeare.

Barrels placed under the floor of a chamber,
make all noises in the same more full and refounding. Bacon's Natural History.

Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full refounding line. Pope.

12. Mature; perfect.

In the sultanry of the Mamalukes, slaves reigned over families of free men; and much like were the case, if you suppose a nation, where the custom were that after full age the sons should expunge their fathers out of their possessions. Bacon.

So law appears imperfect, and but given
With purpose to resign them in full time
Up to a better covenant. Milton.

Addison's Ovid.

4. Directly.
He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.

He then confronts the bull,
And on his ample forehead aiming full,
The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull. Dryden.

At length resolv'd, he throws with all his force
Full at the temples of the warrior horse.

Dryden's Aeneid.

5. It is placed before adverbs and adjectives, to intend or strengthen their signification.

Tell me why on your shield, so goodly scor'd,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?

Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead. Spenser.

I was set at work
Among my maids: full little, God knows looking Either for such men or such business.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Full well we reject the commandment.

Mar. vii. 9.

Adam was all in tears, and to his guide
Lamenting turn'd full sad. Milton's Par. Lost.

You full little think that you must be the beginner of the discourse yourself.

Moore's Divine Dialogues.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight.

Dryden.

Full well the god his sister's envy knew,
And what her aims and what her arts pursue.

Dryden.

There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself. Swift.

FULL is much used in composition to intimate anything arrived at its highest state, or utmost degree.

FULL-BLOWN. adj. [full and blown.]

1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.

My glories are past danger; they're full blown:
Things, that are blasted, are but in the bud.

Denham's Sophy.

My full-blown youth already fades apace;
Of our short being 'tis the shortest space.

Dryden's Juvenal.

2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.
He who with bold Cratinus is inspir'd,
With zeal and equal indignation fir'd;
Who at enormous villainy turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown fail.

Dryden's Persius.

FULL-BOTTOMED. adj. [full and bottom.]
Having a large bottom.

I was obliged to sit at home in my morning gown, having pawned a new suit of cloaths and a full-bottomed wig for a sum of money. Guardian.

FULL-EARED. adj. [full and ear.] Having the heads full of grain.

As flames roll'd by the winds conspiring force,
O'er full-ear'd corn, or torrent raging course.

Denham.

All as a partridge plump, full-fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well-bodied air.

Pope's Dunciad.

FULL-LADEN. adj. [full and laden.] Laden till there can be no more added.

It were unfit that so excellent a reward as the Gospel promises should stoop down, like fruit upon a full-laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand. Tillotson.

FULL-SPREAD. adj. [full and spread.] Spread to the utmost extent.

How easy 'tis, when destiny proves kind,
With full-spread sails to run before the wind;
But those that gainst stiff gales lavingering go,
Must be at once resolv'd and skilful too. Dryden.

FULL-SUMMED. adj. [full and summed.] Complete in all its parts.

The cedar stretched forth his branches, and the king of birds nested within his leaves, thick feathered, and with full-summed wings fastening his talons East and West; but now the eagle is become half naked. Howell's Vocal Fossils.

To FULL. v. a. [full, Latin.] To cleanse cloth from its oil or grease.

FULLAGE. [from full.] The money paid for fulling or cleansing cloth.

trade is to cleanse cloth.

The clothiers have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can whiten them.

Mar. ix. 3.

FULLERS. Earth. n. f.

Fullers earth is a marl of a close texture, extremely soft and unctuous to the touch: when dry it is of a greyish brown colour, in all degrees, from very pale to almost black, and generally has a greenish cast in it. The finest fullers earth is dug in our own island. Hill's Mat. Medica.

The fullers earth of England very much exceeds any yet discovered abroad in goodness; which is one great reason why the English surpass all other nations in the woollen manufacture.

Woodward on Fossils.

FULLERS Thistle, or Weed. n. f. [dipsacus.] A plant.

FULLERY. n. f. [from fuller.] The place where the trade of a fuller is exercised.

and fulling-mills, they beat their hemp.

Mortimer.

FULLY. adv. [from full.]

1. Without vacuity.

2. Com-

FUL

2. Completely; without lack; without more to be desired.

There are many graces for which we may not cease hourly to sue, graces which are in bestowing always, but never come to be fully had in this present life; and therefore, when all things here have an end, endless thanks must have their beginning in a state which bringeth the full and final satisfaction of all such perpetual desires. Hooker.

He fully possessed the entire revelation he had received from God, and had thoroughly digested it. Locke.

The goddess cry'd

It is enough, I'm fully satisfy'd. Add. Ovid.
FULMINANT. adv. [fulminant, French: fulminans, Latin.] Thundering; making a noise like thunder.

To FULMINATE. v. n. [fulmino, Lat. fulminer, French.]

To the houses I wished nothing more than safety, fulness, and freedom. King Charles.

2. The state of abounding in any quality good or bad.

3. Completeness; such as leaves nothing to be desired.

Your enjoyments are so complete, I turn wishes into gratulations, and congratulating their fulness only with their continuance. South.

4. Completeness from the coalition of many parts.

The king set forwards to London, receiving the acclamations and applauses of the people as he went; which indeed were true and unfeigned, as might well appear in the very demonstration and fulness of the cry. Bacon's Henry VII.

5. Completeness; freedom from deficiency.

In thy presence is fulness of joy. Psalms.

He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such as she;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him. Shakespeare's King John.

6. Repletion; satiety.

I need not instance in the habitual intemperance of rich tables, nor the evil accidents and effects of fulness, pride and lust, wantonness and softness.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

7. Plenty; wealth.

To lapse in fulness
Is forer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

8. Struggling perturbation; swelling in the mind.

FUM

A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. Bacon's Essays.

9. Largeness; extent.

There wanted the fulness of a plot, and variety of characters to form it as it ought; and perhaps something might have been added to the beauty of the style. Dryden.

10. Force of sound, such as fills the ear; vigour.

This sort of pastoral derives almost its whole beauty from a natural ease of thought and smoothness of verse; whereas that of most other kinds consists in the strength and fulness of both. Pope.

FU'LSOME. adj. [from fulle, Saxon, foul.]

1. Nauseous; offensive.

He that brings fulsome objects to my view,
With nauseous images my fancy fills,
And all goes down like oxymel of squills. Roscommon.

Now half the youth of Europe are in arms,
How fulsome must it be to stay behind,
And die of rank diseases here at home? Orway's Orphan.

2. Rank; gross; to the smell.

White fatyrion is of a dainty smell, if the plant puts forth white flowers only, and those not thin or dry, they are commonly of rank and fulsome smell. Bacon.

3. Lustful.

He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakespeare.

4. Tending to obscenity.

A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet. Dryden.

Our mechanick theists will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system. Cudworth.

2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.

Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

3. To play childishly.

I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end. Shakespeare's Henry V.

To FU'MBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.

As many farewells as be stars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shakespeare.

His greasy bald-pate choir

Came fumbling o'er the beads, in such an agony
They told 'em false for fear. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

FU'MBLER. n. f. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.

FU'MBLINGLY. adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.

FUME. n. f. [fumée, French; fumus, Latin.]

1. Smoke.

Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume.

But streight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,

FUM

They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly. Dryden.

2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes. Shakespeare.

It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, of other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.

In Winter, when the heat without is less, breath becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crasser vapour; and may, by proper vessels, fet in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward's Natural History.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.

The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South.

Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryd. Pers.

Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain surprise,

And its mad fumes in hot discourses rise;

But time these yielding vapours will remove:

Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.

The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.

5. Any thing unsubstantial.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and waffle so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.

Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influence upon these things below, than they have, but in gross. Bacon.

To lay aside all that may seem to have a shew of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon's War with Spain.

To FUME. v. n. [fumer, French; fumo, Latin.]

1. To smoke.

Their pray'rs pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd
By their great intercessor; came in fight
Before the Father's throne. Milton's Paradise Lost.

From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryden's Æneid.

Strait hover round the fair her airy band,
Some, as the sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd. Pope.

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations, as by heat.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

Silenus lay,
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Roscommon.

3. To pass away in vapours.

We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning:
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. Ben Jonson's Catil.

Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cuvier's Phil. Prim.

The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd race

Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
The fuggard sleep beneath its fann'd beam;
For their light flumbers gentle fum'd away. Temple's Spring.

4. To be in a rage; to be hot with anger.

When he knew his rival freed and gone,
He fell with wrath; he mark'd our outrage, us moan:
He frets the fumes, he flares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow row'r with clamours rings around. Dryden.

To FUME. v. a.

1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.

Those

Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume, by hanging them upon long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Caveau.

2. To perfume with odours in the fire. She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame, }
And oft before the sacred altars came, }
To pray for him who was an empty name. Dry. }
The fuming of the holes with brimstone, garlick, } or other unfavoury things, will drive moles out of } the ground. Mortimer.

They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Still.

4. Trade; occupation.

Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits. Shakespeare.

5. Office of any particular part of the body.

The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley's Sermons.

6. Power; faculty: either animal or intellectual.

Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect, A broken voice, and his whole function suiting With forms to his conceit. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Nature seems

In all her functions weary of herself:

My race of glory run, and race of shame;

And I shall shortly be with them that rest. Milton.

Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head, As the mind opens, and its functions spread,

Imagination plies her dang'rous art,

And pours it all upon the peccant part. Pope.

Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are their diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbutnot.

FUND. n. f. [fond, French; funda, a bag, Lat.]

1. Stock; capital; that by which any expence is supported.

He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,

And part employ'd to roll the watery tide. Dryden.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

2. Stock or bank of money.

As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres. Addison.

And flings the future people from his hand. Adams's Ovid.

F Y

FU'TURE. n. f. [from the adjective.] Time to come; somewhat to happen hereafter.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time; and I feel now

The future in the instant. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.

FU'TURELY. adv. [from future.] In time to come.

This prescience of God, as it is prescience, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding; neither doth God's foreknowledge impose any necessity, or bind. Raleigh.

FUTURITION. n. f. [from future.] The state of being to be; the condition of being to come to pass hereafter.

Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang to loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no? Soub.

FUTURITY. n. f. [from future.]

1. Time to come; events to come.

Not my service past, nor present sorrows;
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me. Shakespeare's Othello.

I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron. Swift.

2. Event to come.

All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place. South.

This great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,
Though skill'd in fate and dark futurity. Pope's Statius.

3. The state of being to be; futurition.

It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, sedate, and intent mind, as it may be, is no where found but among the platonical ideas. Glanville's Scepis.

To FUZZ. v. n. [without etymology.] To fly out in small particles.

FUZZBALL. n. f. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.

And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wrecks themselves do now allay. Spenser.

Fy, my lord, fy! a foldier and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

A bawd, sir, fy upon him! Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stray!

Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.

Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?

Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:
Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:
My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite. Dryden.

Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaieties. Taylor.

G.

GAB

G Has two sounds, one from the Greek Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound G retains before a, o, u, l, r; as, gate, go, gull. The other sound, called that of the soft G, resembles that of J, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, giobet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of words before b: as, might. The Saxon G, ȝ, seems to have had generally the sound y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.

GABARDINE. n. f. [gavardina, Italian.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.

My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabouts.

Shakespeare's Temp.

You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,

And spit upon my Jewish gabardine.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

The knight did straight submit;

And laid his weapons at her feet:

Next he disrob'd his gabardine,

And with it did himself resign. Hudibras.

GABBLE. v. n. [gabbare, Italian; gabberen, Dutch.]

1. To make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage,
Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known. Shak. Temp.

Flocks of fowl, that when the tempests roar,
With their hoarse gabbles seek the silent shoar.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house?

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Which made some think, when he did gabble,

Th' had heard three labourers of Babel. Hudib.

Such a rout, and such a rabble,

Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift.

GABBLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.

Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose:
chough's language, gabble enough, and good enough.

Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

2. Loud talk without meaning.

Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls,
Not understood. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GABLE. n. f. [gavall, Welsh; gable, French.] The sloping roof of a building.

GAD

Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GAD. n. f. [ȝad, Saxon; gaddur, Islandick, a club.]

1. A wedge or ingot of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

2. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for a stile or graver, [from ȝad, Saxon, a goad.]

I will go get a leaf of brags,

And with a gad of steel will write these words.

Shakespeare.

To GAD. v. n. [Derived by Skinner from gadfly; by Junius from gadaw, Welsh, to forsake; thought by others only the preterite of the old word agaan, to go.] To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.

How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?

—Where I have learnt me to repent.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Ecclef. xxv. 25.

The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,
And thronged forth about the world to gad;

Each land they fill'd, river, stream, and shore.

Fairfax.

Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home.

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call

Of an untrained hope or passion;

To court each place or fortune that doth fall,

Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.

Thee, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,

With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'er-grown,

And all their echo's moan. Milton.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their stings

draw blood,

And drive the cattle gadding through the wood.

Dryden.

She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;

With furies frights her from her native home,

And drives her gadding round the world to roam.

Dryden.

There's an ox lost, and this coxcomb runs a gadding after wild fowl. L'Estrange.

No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding. Locke.

GADDER. n. f. [from gad.] A rambler: one that runs much abroad without business.

A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, causeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame.

Ecclef. xxvi. 8.

GADDLINGLY. adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

GADFLY. n. f. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of god; it is called god-fly. Supposed to be originally from god, in Saxon ȝad, and fly.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about; the breeze.

The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat

GAG

1. Artificial spurs put upon cocks when they are set to fight.

2. A steel contrivance to bend cross-bows.

Ainsworth.

To GAG. v. n. [from gagel, Dutch, the palate, Minsheu.] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.

He's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

There foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound.

Pope.

GAG. n. f. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.

Some, when the kids their dams too deeply drain,

With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain. Dryden.

Your woman would have run up stairs before me; but I have secured her below with a gag in her chaps. Dryden.

GAGE. n. f. [gage, French.]

1. A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

He, when the shamed shield of slain Sansfoy
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory from him snatcht away.

Fairy Queen.

There I throw my gage,

Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,

And lay aside my high blood's royalty.

Shakespeare's Richard II.

There is my gage, the manual seal of death,

That marks thee out for hell. Shak. Richard II.

They from their mothers breasts poor orphans

rend,

Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandys.

I am made the cautionary pledge,

The gage and hostage of your keeping it.

Southern's Oroonoko.

But since it was decreed, auspicious king,

In Britain's right that thou should'st wed the main,

Heav'n, as a gage, would cast some previous thing,

And therefore doom'd that Lawson should be slain. Dryden.

In any truth that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments, that gain it assent, are the vouchers and gages of its probability. Locke.

2. A measure; a rule of measuring.

One judges, as the weather dictates, right

The poem is at noon, and wrong at night;

Another judges by a surer gage;

An author's principles, or parentage. Young.

To GAGE. v. a. [gager, French.]

1. To

1. To wager; to depone as a wager; to im- pawn; to give as a caution, pledge, or security.
A moiety competent

Was gaged by our king. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
He found the Turkish merchants making merry:
unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him. Knolles's History.

2. To bind by some caution or furety; to engage.

My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts
Wherein my time; something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged. Shakespeare.
3. To measure; to take the contents of any ves- sel of liquids particularly. More properly gauge.
See GAUGE.

We shall see your bearing.
—Nay, but I bar to-night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
To GA'GGLE. v. n. [gagen, gageon, Dutch.] To make a noise like a goose.

Birds prune their feathers, geese gaggle, and crows seem to call upon rain; which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air.
Bacon's Natural History.

May fat geese gaggle with melodious voice,
And ne'er want gooseberries or apple-sauce. King.
GA'LLY. adv. [from gay.]

1. Airily; cheerfully.
2. Splendidly. See GAYLY.

GAIN. n. f. [gain, French.]

1. Profit; advantage: contrary to loss.
But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Phil. iii. 7.

Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victory should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general consent. Raleigh's Essays.

Havock and spoil, and ruin are my gain. Milt.
It is in praise of men as in gettings and gains;
for light gains make heavy purses; for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then. Bacon's Essays.

This must be made by some governor upon his own private account, who has a great stock that he is content to turn that way, and is invited by the gains. Temple.

Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,
Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryden.
Folly fights for kings or dives for gain. Pope.

2. Interest; lucrative views.
That, fir, which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shakspeare's King Lear.

3. Unlawful advantage.
Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom
I sent unto you? 2 Cor. xii. 17.

If pride, if envy, if the lust of gain,
If mad ambition in thy bosom reign,
Thou boast'st it, alas! thy sober sense in vain.
Fitzgerald.

4. Overplus in a comparative computation; any thing opposed to loss.
To GAIN. v. a. [gagner, French.]

1. To obtain as profit or advantage.
Egypt became a gained ground by the muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees into a firm land.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

He gains, to live as Man,
Higher degree of life. Milton.
What reinforcement we may gain from hope.
Milton.

2. To win; not to lose.
A leper once he lost, and gain'd a king. Milt.

3. To have the overplus in comparative computation.
If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty
one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. To obtain; to procure; to receive.
I acceptance found, which gain'd
This answer from the gracious voice divine.
Milton.

That side some small reflection gains
Of glimm'ring air, less vex'd with tempest loud.
Milton.

If such a tradition were endeavour'd to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult to conceive how ever it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson's Sermons.

For fame with toil we gain, but lose with ease,
Sure some to vex, but never all to please. Pope.

5. To obtain increase of any thing allotted.
I know that ye would gain the time, because ye see the king is gone from me. Dun. ii. 8.

6. To obtain whatever, good or bad.
Ye should not have loosed from Crete, and have gained this harm and loss. Acts, xxvii. 21.

7. To win against opposition.
They who were sent to the other pass, after a short resistance, gained it. Clarendon.

Fat fees from the defended Umbrian draws,
And only gains the wealthy client's cause.
Dryden's Persius.

O love! for Sylvia let me gain the prize,
And make my tongue victorious as her eyes.
Pope.

8. To draw into any interest or party.
Come, with presents, laden from the port,
To gratify the queen and gain the court. Dry. Virg.

If Pyrrhus must be wrought to pity,
No woman does it better than yourself:
If you gain him, I shall comply of course.
A. Philips.

9. To obtain as a wooer.
He never shall find out fit mate, but such
As some misfortune brings him, or mistake,
Or whom he wishes most shall seldom gain
Through her perverseness, but shall see her gain'd
By a far worse. Milton.

10. To reach; to attain.
The West still glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Death was the post, which I almost did gain:
Shall I once more be tost into the main? Waller.

Sun! found his praise
In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st. Milton.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it.
Addison on Italy.

Thus sav'd from death, they gain the Pheasant shores,
With shatter'd vessels and disabled oars. Pope's Ody.

11. To GAIN over. To draw to another party or interest.
The court of Hanover should have endeavour'd to gain over those who were represented as their enemies. Swift.

To GAIN. v. n.
1. To grow rich; to have advantage; to be advanced in interest or happiness.
Thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortions. Ezek. xxii. 12.

2. To encroach; to come forward by degrees:
with on.
When watchful herons leave their watry stand,
And mounting upward with erected flight,
Gain on the skies, and soar above the flight.
Dryden's Virgil.

So on the land, while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains. Pope.

3. To get ground; to prevail against: with on.
The English have not only gained upon the Venetians in the Levant, but have their cloth in Venice itself. Addison.

4. To obtain influence with: with on.
My good behaviour had gained so far on the emperor, that I began to conceive hopes of liberty.
Swift.

GAIN. adj. [An old word now out of use.]
Handy; ready; dexterous. Preface to the Accidence.

GAINER. n. f. [from gain.] One who receives profit or advantage.

The client besides retaining a clear confidence, is always a gainer, and by no means can be at any loss, as seeing, if the composition be overheard, he may relieve himself by recourse to his oath.
Bacon's Office of Alienation.

If what I get in empire
I lose in fame, I think myself no gainer.
Denham's Sophy.

He that loses any thing, and gets wisdom by it, is a gainer by the loss. L'Estrange.

By trade, we are as great gainers by the commodities of other countries as of our own nation.
Addison's Freeholder.

GA'INFUL. adj. [gain and full.]

1. Advantageous; profitable.
He will dazzle his eyes, and bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase, some rich match, or advantageous project. South.

2. Lucrative; productive of money.
Nor knows he merchants gainful care.
Dryden's Horace.

Maro's muse commodious precepts gives,
Instructive to the swains, nor wholly bent
On what is gainful: sometimes she diverts
From solid counsels. Philips.

GA'INFULLY. adv. [from gainful.] Profitably;
advantageously.

GA'INFULNESS. n. f. [from gainful.] Profit; advantage.

GA'INGIVING. n. f. [gainst and give.] The same as misgiving; a giving against: as gainfaying, which is still in use, is saying against, or contradicting. Hannet.

It is but foolery; but it is such kind of gaingiving
as would, perhaps, trouble a woman.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

GA'INLESS. adj. [from gain.] Unprofitable;
producing no advantage.

GA'INLESSNESS. n. f. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainlessness as well as laboriousness of the work: miners, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the insatiable miser. Decay of Piety.

GA'INLY. adv. [from gain.] Handily; readily;
dexterously. Out of use.

To GA'INSAY. v. a. [gainst and say.]

1. To contradict; to oppose; to controvert with; to dispute against.
Speeches which gain say one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject. Hooker.

Too facile then, thou didst not much gain say;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milt.

2. To deny any thing.
I never heard yet
That any of those bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gain say what they did,
Than to perform it first. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

GA'INSAVER. n. f. [from gainfay.] Opponent;
adversary.

Such as may satisfy gainfayers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the same at our hands. Hooker.

We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest gainfayers of Scripture, even in that which we read for Scripture unto the people. Hooker.

It was full matter of conviction to all gainfayers.
Hammond.

Others fought themselves a name by being his gainfayers, but failed of their purpose. Fell.

GA'INST. prep. [for against.] See AGAINST.

Tremble, ye nations! who, secure before, Laugh'd at those arms, that gain'd ourselves we bore. Dryden.

To GA'INSTAND. v. a. [gainst and stand.] To withstand; to oppose; to resist. A proper word, but not in use.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of reverent duty gainstand the force of so many enraged desires. Side y.

GA'IRISH. adj. [gayman, to dress fine, Sax.]

1. Gaudy; showy; splendid; fine.
Three or four will outrage in apparel, huge hose, monstrous hats, and gaish colours. Johnson.

I call'd

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was;
A mother, only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast, a gairish flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

There in clove covert by some brook,
Where no profaner eye may look,
Hide me from day's gairish eye.

Milton.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.
Fame and glory transport a man out of himself:
it makes the mind loose and gairish, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of dissolution upon all the faculties.

South.

GAI'IRISHNESS. n. f. [from gairish.]
1. Finery; flaunting gaudiness.
2. Flighty or extravagant joy.
Let your hope be without vanity, or gairishness of spirit, but sober, grave, and silent.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

GAIT. n. f. [gat, Dutch.]
1. A way; as, gang your gait.
Good youth, address thy gait unto her:
Be not denied access, stand at her door.

Shakespeare.

2. March; walk.
Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,
And all her vain allurements did forsake. F. Queen.
Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait.

Hubbard's Tale.

3. The manner and air of walking.
Great Juno comes, I know her by her gait.

Shakespeare.

He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion.

Clarendon.

A third, who by his gait
And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell.

Milton.

Leviathans
Wallowing, unweildy, enormous in their gait.

Milton.

I describ'd his way,
Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait. Milt.
GALA'GE. n. f. A shepherd's clog, Not in use.
My heart-blood is well nigh frone, I feel;
And my galige grown fast to my heel. Spenser.
GALA'GAL. n. f. [galange, French.] A medicinal root.

The lesser galangai is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangai is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste.

Hill.

GALA'XY. n. f. [galaxia; galaxie, Fr.] The milky way; a stream of light in the sky, consisting of many small stars.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd.

Cleaveland.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy.

Cowley.

We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy.

Bentley.

GALBANUM. n. f.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops of tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour: its smell is strong and disagreeable. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an um-belliferous plant.

Hill's Materia Medica.

It yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum.

Ecluf. xxiv. 15.

GALL. n. f. [galling, hafty, sudden, Germ.]

A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale

Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona?

Shakespeare.

Winds

Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd
From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells.

Milton.

Fresh gales and gentle air.

Umbria's green retreats,

Where western gales eternally reside.

Addison.

GALL'ATED. adj. [galeatus, Latin.]

1. Covered as with a helmet.

A gallated eschinus copped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing.

Woodward on Fossils.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling an helmet, as the monkhood.

GALERI'ULATE. adj. [from galerus, Latin.]
Covered as with a hat.

GAL'LOT. n. f. [gallotte, French.] A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very slight and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three patereroes. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar.

Ditt.

Barbarossa sent two notable pyrates with thirty gallois, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered, and forced again to their gallois.

Knolles's History.

GALL. n. f. [zeala, Saxon; galle, Dutch.]
1. The bile, an animal juice remarkable for its supposed bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers!

Shakespeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall.

Shakespeare.

This position informs us of a vulgar error,
terming the gall bitter, as their proverb implies
It's as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing gustiably sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet favour.

Harvey.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk:
Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success.

Arbutnot on Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar.

Brown.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.
Thither, write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall.

Shakespeare's Cymbel.

Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste!

Shakespeare.

She still insults, and you must still adore;
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more.

Dryden's Juvenal.

4. Rancour; malignity.
They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people.

Spenser on Ireland.

5. Anger; bitterness of mind.
Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the blow.

Prior.

6. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [From the verb.]

This is the fatalest wound; as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch.

Government of the Tongue.

7. [From galls.]
Galls or galuts are preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have Oriental and European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste.
The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort. The general history of galls is this: An insect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg, which, as soon as it is in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation shall be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrescences which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true galls, though less firm in their texture.

Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts.

Bacon's Natural History.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and mor-bose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed.

Ray on the Crea.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them.

Derham.

To GALL. v. a. [galer, French.]

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point

With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast.

Denb.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things.

Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke.
And furious thus, and interrupting spoke,
Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain.

Pope's Iliad.

2. To impair; to wear away.
He doth object, I am too great of birth;

And that my state being gall'd with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth.

Shakespeare.

If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses.

Ray on the Creation.

3. To tease; to fret; to vex.
In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book.

Hooker.

What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we espy that it galls them.

Hooker.

When I shew justice,
I pity those I do not know;
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall.

Shakespeare.

All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

No man commits any sin but his conscience smites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it.

Tillotson.

4. To harass; to mischief; to keep in a state of uneasiness.

The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shots from corners of streets and house-windows galled them.

Sidney.

Light demilances from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs to gall the foe.

Dryden's Æneid.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows.

Addison.

To GALL. v. n. To fret.

I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.

Shakespeare.

GALLANT. adj. [galant, French, from gala, fine dress, Spanish.]

1. Gay;

1. Gay; well dressed; showy; splendid; magnificent.

A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no gally with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby. Isaiah, xxxiii. 21.

The gay, the wife, the gallant, and the grave, Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have. Wallis.

2. Brave; high spirited; daring; magnanimous. Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough. Sidney.
But, fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth. Shakespeare.

A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight. Digby on the Soul.

3. Fine; noble; spacious. There are no tricks in plain and simple faith; But hollow men, like horses hot at hand, Make gallant shew and promise of their metal. Shakespeare.

4. Courteously with respect to ladies. He discoursed, how gallant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress. Clarendon.

When first the foul of love is sent abroad, The gay troops begin In gallant thought to plume their painted wings. Thomson.

GALLANT, n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man. The new proclamation.

—What is't for?
—The reformation of our travell'd gallants, That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylor. Shakespeare.

The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vastus. Kneller's History of the Turks.

The gallants, to protect the lady's right, Their functions brandish'd at the grizzly sight. Dryden.

Gallants, look to't, you say there are no sprights; But I'll come dance about your beds at nights. Dryden.

2. A whoremaster, who caresses women to debauch them.

One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison's Spectator.

3. A wooer, one who courts a woman for marriage. In the two latter senses it has commonly the accent on the last syllable.

GALLANTRY, adv. [from gallant.]

1. Gayly; splendidly.
2. Bravely; nobly; generously.

You have not dealt so gallantly with us as we did with you in a parallel case: last year a paper was brought here from England, which we ordered to be burnt by the common hangman. Swift.

GALLANTRY, n. f. [galanterie, French.]

1. Splendour of appearance; show; magnificence; glittering grandeur; ostentatious finery. Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all The English youth flock to their admiral. Wallis.

2. Bravery; nobleness; generosity. The eminence of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and ennobling study of nature. Glanville's Scipio Preface.

3. A number of gallants. Hector, Deiphobus, and all the gallantry of Troy, I would have arm'd to-day. Shakespeare.

4. Courtship; refined address to women. The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd, Invent new arts to make their charmers kind. Glanville.

5. Vicious love; lewdness; debauchery. It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a prostitute; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins. Swift.

GALLEASS, n. f. [galeas, French.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rowers; and six or seven slaves to each. To carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns. Dict.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galleasses. Addison on Italy.

My father hath no less Than three great argosies, besides two galleasses, And twelve tight galleies.

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
GALLEON, n. f. [galion, French.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk, or set on fire by the Spanish galleons. Raleigh's Apology.

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers or castles. Bacon's War with Spain.

GALLERY, n. f. [gallerie, French; derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room.]

1. A kind of walk a long the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most parts there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow. Sidney.

High lifted up were many lofty towers, And goodly galleries fair overlaid. Spenser.

Your gallery Have we pass'd through, not without much content. Shakespeare.

The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupolas. Bacon.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led, Not to the foe yet known. Denham.

Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them. Graunt.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison on Italy.

2. The seats of the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

While all its throats the gallery extends, And all the thunder of the pit ascends. Pope.

GALLETTLE, n. f. I suppose this word has the same import with gallet.

Make a compound body of glass and gallettle; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcellane and a glass. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GALLEY, n. f. [galea, Italian; galere, Fr. derived, as some think, from galea, a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from galea, the swordfish; as others from galion, expressing in Syriac men exposed to the sea. From galley come galleass, gallion, galliot.]

1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load Of ships, hulks, galleies, barks, and brigandies. Fairfax.

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, by the use of galleies, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Jafon ranged the coasts of Asia the Lefs in an open boat, or kind of galley. Raleigh's History.

On oozy ground his galleies moor; Their heads are turn'd to sea, their stems to shore. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtships every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the galleies for his recreation, and to the spade and mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual and uninterrupted pleasure. South.

GALLEY-SLAVE, n. f. [gally and slave.] A man condemned for some crime to row in the galleies.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor man, he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy. Bramhall.

Harden'd galley-slaves despise manumission. Decay of Piety.

The surges gently dash against the shore, Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oars. Garrick.

GALLIARD, n. f. [galliard, French; imagine I to be derived from the Gaulish ard, genius; and gay.]

1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow. Seldom is a galliard by himself. Cleveland.

2. An active, nimble, spritely dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

There's nought in France That can be with a nimble galliard won: You cannot revel into dukedoms there. Shakespeare's Henry V.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards. Bacon.

The tripla's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard time and measure time are in the melody of one dance. Bacon.

GALLIARDISE, n. f. [French.] Merriment; exuberant gaiety. Not in use.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watery sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company. Brown's Rel. Med.

GALLICISM, n. f. [gallicisme, French; from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolingbroke.

In the English I would have Gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech. Felton on the Classics.

GALLICASKINS, n. f. [Caligae Gallo V. Johnson.] Large open hose. Not used but in ludicrous language.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood The Winter's fury, and encroaching frosts, By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue, An horrid chafm disclose. Philips.

GALLIMATLLA, n. f. [galimatias, French.] Nonsense; talk without meaning.

GALLIMAUFERY, n. f. [gallimaufre, French.]

1. A hoch-poch, or half of several sorts of broken meat; a medley. Hammer.

They have made of our English tongue a gallimaufry, or hodge-podge of all other speeches. Spenser.

2. Any inconsistent or ridiculous medley. They have a dance, which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in't. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The painter who, under pretence of diverting the eyes, would fill his picture with such varieties as alter the truth of history, would make a ridiculous piece of painting, and a mere gallimaufry of his work. Dryden's Daphnia.

3. It is used by Shakespeare ludicrously of a woman.

Sir John affects thy wife.
—Why, sir, my wife is not young.
—He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor;

He loves the gallimaufry, friend. Shakespeare.
GALLIOT. n. f. [galotte, French.] A small swift galley.

Barbarossa departing out of Hellespontus with eighty galleys, and certain galliots, shaped his course towards Italy. Knolles.

GALLIOT. n. f. [galy, Dutch, shining earth. Skinner. The true derivation is from gala, Spanish, finery. Gala, or gally-pot, is a fine painted pot.] A pot painted and glazed, commonly used for medicines.

Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gallipots, that had on the outside apes, owls, and satyrs; but within, precious drugs.

Here phials in nice discipline are set;
These gallipots are rang'd in alphabet. Garth.
Alexandrinus thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallipot to any man. Spectator.

Thou that dost Æsculapius deride,
And o'er his gallipots in triumph ride. Fentum.

GALLON. n. f. [gelo, Latin.] A liquid measure of four quarts.

Beat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopp'd. Wise. Surgery.

GALLON. n. f. [galon, French.] A kind of close lace, made of gold or silver, or silk alone.

To GALLOW. v. n. [galoper, French. Derived by all the etymologists, after Budæus, from gala, but perhaps it comes from gant, all, and open, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed.]

1. To move forward by leaps; so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was't come by? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

His steeds will be restrain'd,
But gallop lively down the western hill. Donne.

In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain
His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,
When half surpriz'd, and fearing to be seen,
The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threatened a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them. Sidney.

They 'gan espy
An armed knight towards them gallop fast,
That seem'd from some feared foe to fly.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.

3. To move very fast.

The golden sun
Gallops the zodiack in his glist'ring coach.

Whom doth time gallop withal?
—With a thief to the gallows.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.

GALLOWAY. n. f. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hind legs almost at once. Farris's Dict.

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

3. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the North; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

To GALLOW. v. a. [agaelpan, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wrathful skies
Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves.

GALLOWGLASSES. n. f.

1. It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen the Irish call gallowglasses: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallowglass signifies an English fervitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armaturæ; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corset, before the corset was used, or almost invented. Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hammer, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r
Of gallowglasses and stout kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array.

GALLOW. n. f. [It is used by some in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowes.] Singular; but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowes. Gallow, Gothic; zealga, Saxon, galge, Dutch; which some derive from gabalus, furca, Latin; others from גלגל high, others from galla, Welsh, power; but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from agaelpan, the gallows, being the great object of legal terror.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, that were defolation of gaolers and gallowses. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

I prophesied, if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown. Shakespeare's Tempest.

He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected. Hayward.

A poor fellow going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of wafps while he is upon Tyburn road. Swift.

2. A wretch that deserves the gallows.

Cupid hath been five thousand years a boy.
—Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too. Shakespeare.

GALLOWFREE. adj. [galloves and free.] Exempt by destiny from being hanged.

Let him be gallowfree by my consent,
And nothing suffer, since he nothing meant. Dryden.

GALLOWSTREE. adj. [gallowes and tree.] The tree of terror; the tree of execution.

He hung their conquer'd arms, for more defame,
On gallowstrees in honour of his dearest dame. Spenser.

A Scot, when from the gallowstree got loose, Drops into Styx, and turns a soland goafe. Clavelind.

GAMBA'DE. n. f. [gamba, Italian, a leg.] Spat-gambadoes; boots worn upon the legs above the shoe.

The pettifogger ambles to her in his gambadoes once a week. Dennis's Letters.

GAMBLER. n. f. [A cant word, I suppose, for game or gamster.] A knave whose practice it is to invite the unwary to game and cheat them.

GAMBOGE. n. f.

Gamboge is a concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature, heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America and the East-Indies, particularly from Cambodia, or Cambogia. Hill.

To GAMPOL. v. n. [gambiller, French.]

1. To dance; to skip; to frisk; to jump for joy; to play merry frolics.

The king of elfs, and little fairy queen,
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

The monsters of the flood Gambol around him in the wat'ry way,
And heavy whales in awkward measures play. Pope.

2. To leap; to start.

'Tis not madnefs
That I have utter'd; bring me to the test,
And I the matter will reward, which madnefs
Would gambol from. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

GAMBOLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A skip; a hop; a leap for joy.

A gentleman had got a favourite spaniel, that would be still toying and leaping upon him, and playing a thousand pretty gambols. L'Estrange.

Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,
And beafts in gambols frik'd before their honest god. Dryden.

2. A frolick; a wild prank.

For who did ever play his gambols,
With such unsufferable rambles. Hudibras.

GAMBLE. n. f. [from gamba, gambarella, Ital.] The leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mixed as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? as appears by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambol, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back. Grew.

GAME. n. f. [gaman, a jest, Islandick.]

1. Sport of any kind.

We have had pastimes here, and pleasing game. Shakespeare.

2. Jest; opposed to earnest or seriousness.

Then on her head they set a garland green,
And crown'd her 'twixt earnest and 'twixt game. Spenser.

3. Insolent merriment; sportive insult.

Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,
On my refusal, to distress me more;
Or make a game of my calamities? Milt. Agon.

4. A single match at play.

5. Advantage in play.

Mutual vouchers for our fame we stand,
And play the game into each other's hand. Dryden.

6. Scheme pursued; measures planned.

This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other 'till they see an end of this. Temple.

7. Field sports: as, the chase, falconry.

If about this hour he make his way,
Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends with horse and men,
To fet him free from his captivity. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

What arms to use, or nets to frame
Wild beafts to combat, or to tame,
With all the myst'ries of that game. Waller.

Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon gam,
spied a company of buffards and cranes. L'Estrange.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportmen.

Hunting, and men, not beafts, shall be his game,
With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milt. Par. Lost.

There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I know not which to follow.

A bloodhound will follow the person he pursues, and all hounds the particular game they have in chase. Artusbot.

Go, with thy Cynthia hurl the pointed spear
At the rough bear, or chase the flying deer;
I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,
At human hearts we fling, nor ever miss the game. Pope.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:
Our haughty Norman boasts that bar'rous name,
And makes his trembling slaves the royal game. Pope.

The games are done, and Cæsar is returning.

Milo, when entering the Olympick games,
With a huge ox upon his shoulders came.

To GAME. v. n. [gaman, Saxon.]

1. To play at any sport.

2. To play wantonly and extravagantly for money.

Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no way profits either body or mind.

GA'ME-COCK. n. f. [game and cock.] Cocks bred to fight.

They manage the dispute as fiercely as two gamecocks in the pit.

GA'ME-EGG. n. f. [game and egg.] Eggs from which fighting cocks are bred.

Thus boys hatch game-eggs under birds of prey,
To make the fowl more furious for the fray.

GA'ME-KEEPER. n. f. [game and keep.] A person who looks after game, and sees it is not destroyed.

GA'MESOME. adj. [from game.] Frolicsome; gay; sportive; playful; sportful.

Geron, though old, yet gamesome, kept one end with Cosma.

I am not gamesome; I do lack some part

Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.

The gamesome wind among her tresses play,
And curleth up those growing riches there.

Belial, in like gamesome mood.

This gamesome humour of children should rather be encouraged, to keep up their spirits and improve their strength and health, than curbed or restrained.

GA'MESOMENESS. adv. [from game-some.] Meritily.

GA'MESTER. n. f. [from game.]

1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.

Keep a gamster from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

A gamster, the greater matter he is in his art, the worse man he is.

Gamsters for whole patrimonies play;

The steward brings the deeds, which must convey

The whole estate.

Could we look into the mind of a common gamster, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and mattadores: her flumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves.

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamster's pate;

What agony of soul she feels
To see a knave's inverted heels.

Her youngest daughter is run away with a gamster, a man of great beauty, who in dressing and dancing has no superiour.

2. One who is engaged at play.

When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,
The gentler gamster is the soonest winner.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamster seeth always more than a looker on: but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business strait.

3. A merry frolicsome person.

You're a merry gamster,
My lord Sands.

4. A prostitute. Not in use.

She's impudent, my lord,
And was a common gamster to the camp.

GA'MMER. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology; perhaps from grand mere, and therefore used commonly to old women.] The compellation of a woman corresponding to gaffer: as, Gammur Curton's Needle. An old play.

GA'MMON. n. f. [gammons, Italian.]

5. The buttock of an hog salted and dried; the lower end of the flitch.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold:
A rusty gammon of some seven years old.

Gammons, that give a relish to the taste,
And ported fowl, and fish, come in so fast,
That ere the first is out, the second flinks.

2. A kind of play with dice.

The quick dice,
In thunder leaping from the box, awake

The founding gammon.

GA'MUT. n. f. [gama, Italian.] The scale of musical notes.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art,

To teach you gamut in a briefer sort.

When by the gamut some musicians make
A perfect song, others will undertake
By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:

Things simply good can never be unfit.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;

In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a feuge expire.

'GAM, for began, from 'gin for begin.

The noble knight 'gan feel
His vital force to faint.

To GANCH. v. a. [ganciare, from gancio, a hook, Italian; ganche, French.] To drop from a high place upon hooks by way of punishment: a practice in Turkey, to which Smith alludes in his Po-cockius.

Cohors catenis qua pia stridulis
Gemunt onusti, vel fude trans sinum Luctantur acta, pendulive Sanguineis trepidant in uncis.

GA'NDER. n. f. [gander, Saxon.] The male of the goose.

As deep drinketh the goose as the gander.

One gander will serve five geese.

To GANG. v. n. [gangan, Dutch; gangan, Sax. gang, Scottish.] To go; to walk: an old word not now used, except ludicrously.

But let them gang alone,
As they have brewed, so let them bear blame.

Your flaunting beaus gang with their breasts open.

GANG. n. f. [from the verb.] A number herding together; a troop; a company; a tribe; a herd. It is seldom used but in contempt or abhorrence.

Oh, you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me.

As a gang of thieves were robbing a house, a mastiff fell barking.

Admitted in among the gang,
He acts and talks as they befriend him.

GA'NGHON. n. f. [French.] A kind of flower.

GA'NGLION. n. f. [ganglion.] A tumour in the tendinous and nervous parts.

Bonefitters usually represent every bone dislocated, though possibly it be but a ganglion, or other crude tumour or preternatural protuberance of some part of a joint.

To GA'NGRENE. v. a. [from gangrene.] To produce a gangrene; to mortify.

Paris cauterized, gangrenated, fiderated, and mortified, become black, the radical moisture or vital sulphur suffering an extinction.

GA'NGRENE. n. f. [gangrene, Fr. gangræna, Lat.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation followed by putrefaction.

This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates.

She faves the lover, as we gangrenes stay,
By cutting hope, like a lopt limb, away.

A discolouring in the part was supposed an approach of a gangrene.

If the substance of the foul is fettered with these passions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: these inflammations will rage to all eternity.

To GA'NGRENE. v. a. [gangrene, French; from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently for that the few spirits that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete.

Gangren'd members must be lop'd away,
Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay.

To GA'NGRENE. v. n. To become mortified.

Wounds immedicable
Rackle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out.

GA'NGRENOUS. adj. [from gangrene.] Mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hamorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous.

GA'NGWAY. n. f. In a ship, the several ways or passages from one part of it to the other.

GA'NGWEEK. n. f. [gang and week.] Rogation week, when processions are made to lustrate the bounds of parishes.

GA'NTLEPE. n. f. [gantlet is only corrupted GA'NTLET.] from gantelope, gant, all; and loopen, to run, Dutch.] A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man.

But would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,
Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose,
To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes?

Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes.

GA'NZ. n. f. [ganza, Spanish, a goose.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuoso was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

They are but idle dreams and fancies,
And favour strongly of the ganz's.

GAOL. n. f. [gaol, Welsh; gaole, French.] A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and too often written jail, and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol.

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my gaol.

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners.

To GAOL. v. a. [from the noun.] To imprison; to commit to gaol.

Gaoling vagabonds was chargeable, pesterous, and of no open example.

GA'OLDELIVERY. n. f. [gaol and deliver.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth th' aspiring foul the body leave,
Which we call death; but were it known to all,
What life our souls do by this death receive,
Men would it birth of gaol-delivery call.

These make a general gaol-delivery of souls, not for punishment.

GA'OLER. n. f. [from gaol.] Keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The steeld gaoler is the friend of men.

I know not how or why my furly gaoler,
Hard as his irons, and insolent as pow'r
When put in vulgar hands, Cleanthes,
Put off the brute.

From the polite part of mankind she had been banished and immured, 'till the death of her gaoler. Tailler.

GAP. n. f. [from gape.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.
Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tailler's Husbandry.
With terrors and with furies to the bounds
And crystal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide, Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd
Into the wasteful deep. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Bushes are most laiting of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps. Mortimer's Husbandry.
I fought for a man, says God, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, for the land that I should not destroy it. Rogers.

2. A breach.

The loss of that city concerned the Christian commonweal: manifold miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap to all that side of Christendom. Knolles.

3. Any passage.

So stands the Thracian herdman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood. Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.

The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deserved, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stoppt. Spenser.

5. A hole; a deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Nor is it any botch or gap in the works of nature. More.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.

Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were differ'd. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,
Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras.

One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift.

7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other. Pope.

8. To stop a GAP, is to escape by some mean shift: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes,
'till the quicksets will grow.

His policy consists in setting traps,
In finding ways and means, and stopping gaps. Swift.

9. To stand in the GAP. To make defence; to expose himself for the protection of something in danger.

What would become of the church, if there were none more concerned for her rights than this? Who would stand in the gap? Lefley.

GAP-TOOTHED. adj. [gap and tooth.] Having interstices between the teeth.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other, as much as the mincing lady pri-oress and the broad speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

To GAPE. v. n. [geapan, Saxon.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat. Shakespeare.

Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour. Arbutnot.

She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,

And asks if it be time to rise. Swift.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

As callow birds,
Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away;

G A R

And at each leaf that stirs, each blast of wind,
Gape for the food which they must never find. Dryden.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.

3. To desire earnestly; to crave: with for.
To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes. Denham.

To thy fortune be not thou a slave?
For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?
And thou, who gapest for my estate, draw near;
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryden's Preface.

4. With after.
What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping after court-favour and preferments?
L'Estrange.

5. With at.
Many have gaped at the church revenues; but, before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stoppt in the church-yard. South.

6. To open in fissures or holes.

If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape.
And bid me hold my peace. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The great horse-muffel, with the fine shell, doth gape and shut as the oysters do. Bacon's Natural History.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South.

The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vesicles. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

7. To open with a breach.

The planks, their pitchy coverings wash'd away,
Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,
Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryden.

That all these actions can be performed by aliment, as well as medicine, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbutnot.

8. To open; to have an hiatus.

There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on another for want of a cæsure
in this poem. Dryden.

9. To make a noise with open throat.

And, if my muse can through past ages see,
That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he. Roscommon.

10. To stare with hope or expectation.

Others will gape 't anticipate
The cabinet designs of fate;
Apply to wizards, to foresee
What shall, and what shall never be. Hudib.

11. To stare with wonder.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawber; and the end of all this to cause laughter: a very monster in Bartholomew fair, for the mob to gape
at. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Where elevated o'er the gaping crowd,
Clasp'd in the board the perjurd head is bow'd, Betimes retreat. Gay's Trivia.

12. To stare irreverently.

They have gaped upon me with their mouth. Job, xvi. 10.

GA'PER. n. f. [from gape.]

1. One who opens his mouth.

2. One who stares foolishly.

3. One who longs or craves.

The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

GAR, in Saxon, signifies a weapon: so Fedgar is a happy weapon; Ethelgar, a noble weapon. Gibson's Camden.

G A R

To GAR. v. a. [giera, Islandick.] To cause; to make. Obsolete. It is still used in Scotland.

Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?
Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds to sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lafs forlorn. Spenser's Pastoral.

GARB. n. f. [garbe, French.]

1. Drefs; cloaths; habit.

Thus Belial, with words cloath'd in reason's garb,
Counsel'd ignoble ease and peaceful sloth. Milton.

He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physick, and sets up. L'Estrange.

2. Fashion of drefs.

Horace's wit, and Virgil's state
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their cloaths did wear. Denham.

3. Exterior appearance.

This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect

A faucy roughness, and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GA'RBAGE. n. f. [garbear, Spanish.] This etymology is very doubtful.]

1. The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.

The cloyed will,
That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb, Longs after for the garbage. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Luft, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will fate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A flum more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old Aruspicy and aug'ry,
That out of garbages of cattle
Presag'd th' events of truce or battle. Hudibras.

Who, without aversion, ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd? Roscommon.

When you receive condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage. Dryden.

GA'RBEL. n. f. A plank next the keel of a ship.

GA'RRIDGE. n. f. Corrupted from garbage.

All shavings of horns, hoofs of cattle, blood, and garbidge, is good manure for land. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GA'RRISH. n. f. Corrupted from garbage.

In Newfoundland they improve their ground with the garbish of fish. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GA'RBLE. v. a. [garbellare, Italian.] To fit;
to part; to separate the good from the bad.

But you who fathers and traditions take,
And garble some, and some you quite forsake. Dryden.

Had our author set down this command, without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, it had made directly against him. Locke.

The understanding works to collate, combine, and garble the images and ideas, the imagination and memory present to it. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

GA'RBLE. n. f. [from garble.] He who separates one part from another.

A farther secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it. Swift's Examiner.

GA'RBOL. n. f. [garbouille, French; garbuglio, Italian.] Disorder; tumult; uproar. Hammer.

Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read
What garbolls she awak'd. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

GARD. n. f. [garde, French.] Wardship; care; custody.

GARDEN. n. f. [gardal, Welsh; jardin, French;
giardino, Italian.]

1. A piece of ground inclosed, and cultivated with extraordinary care, planted with herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure.

Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
Which one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next. Shakespeare.

My

My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holbourn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

In the royal ordering of gardens, there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year.

Bacon's Essays.

In every garden should be provided flowers, fruit, shade and water.

Temple.

My garden takes up half my daily care,
And my field-alks the minutes I can spare.

Harte.

1. A place particularly fruitful or delightful.
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

3. GARDEN is often used in composition for hortens, or belonging to a garden.

4. Garden-mould. Mould fit for a garden.
They delight most in rich black garden-mould, that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay.

Mortimer.

5. Garden-tillage. Tillage used in cultivating gardens.

Peas and beans are what belong to garden tillage
as well as that of the field.

Mortimer's Husband.

6. Garden-ware. The produce of gardens.
A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel.

Mort. Husband.

To GARDEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To cultivate a garden; to lay out gardens.

At first, in Rome's poor age,
When both her kings and consuls held the plough,
Or garden'd well.

Ben Jonson's Catiline.

When ages grow to civility and elegancy, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely;
as if gardening were the greater perfection.

Bacon.

GARDENER. n. f. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will.

Shak. Oth.

Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips.

Bac. Nat. Hist.

The gardener may lop religion as he pleases.

Howell.

The life and felicity of an excellent gardener is preferable to all other diversions.

Evelyn's Kal.

Then let the learned gardener mark with care
The kinds of stocks, and what those kinds will bear.

Dryden.

GARDENING. n. f. [from garden.] The act of cultivating or planning gardens.

My compositions in gardening are after the Pin-darick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer eleganccies of art.

Spectator.

GARE. n. f. Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep.

Diet.

GARGARISM. n. f. [γαργαρίσμος; gargarism, French.] A liquid form of medicine to wash the mouth with.

Quincy.

Apoplegmatisms and gargarisms draw the rheum down by the palate.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To GARGARIZE. v. a. [γαργαρίζω; gargariser, French.] To wash the mouth with medicated liquors.

Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargarized, doth ease the hicough; for that is astringent, and inhibits the motion of the spirit.

Bacon's N. Hist.

This being relaxed, may make a shaking of the larynx; as when we gargarize.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

GARGET. n. f. A distemper in cattle.
The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts.

Mortimer's Husband.

To GARGLE. v. a. [garguiller, Fr. gargogliar, Ital. gargel, German, the throat.]

1. To wash the throat with some liquor not suffered immediately to descend.

Gargle twice or thrice with sharp oxybate.

Harvey.

The excision made, the bleeding will soon be stopt by gargling with oxybate.

Wifson's Surgery.

They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
Next gargle well their throats.

Dryden's Pers.

2. To warble; to play in the throat. An improper use.

Those which only warble long,
And gargle in their throats a song.

Waller.

So charm'd you were, you ceas'd a while to doat

On nonsense garg'd in an eunuch's throat.

Fenton.

GARGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.

His throat was wash'd with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure.

Wifson's Surgery.

GARGOLION. n. f. An exsudation of nervous juice from a bruise, or the like, which indurates into a hard immovable tumour.

Quincy.

GARGOL. n. f. A distemper in hogs.
The signs of the gargol in hogs are, hanging down of the head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite.

Mortimer.

GARLAND. n. f. [garlande, guirland, French.]
1. A wreath of branches and flowers.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,
A garland made, on temples for to wear;

For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village-lord that Whitfuntide to bear.

Sidney.

A reeling world will never stand upright,
'Till Richard wear the garland of his realm.

—How! wear the garland! do'st thou mean the crown?

Shakespeare, Richard III.

—Ay, my good lord.
Then party-colour'd flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head.

Dryden's Fables.

Vanquish again; though she be gone,
Whose garland crown'd the victor's hair,

And reign! though she has left the throne,
Who made thy glory worth thy care.

Prior.

Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew.

Pope.

2. The top; the principal; the thing most prized.

With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland.

Shakespeare.

GARLICK. n. f. [gar, Saxon, a lance; and leek, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinner.
Allium, Latin.]

It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymbus on the top of the stalk; and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds.

Miller.

Garlick is of an extremely strong smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is extremely active, as may be proved by applying plasters of garlick to the feet, which will give a strong smell to the breath.

Hill.

Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh.

Temple.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a sacred pow'r:

Religious nations sure, and blest abodes,
Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods.

Tate's Juvenal.

GARLICK Pear-tree. n. f.
This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit, which, when ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, but a strong scent of garlick.

Miller.

GARLICK Wild. n. f. A plant.

GARLICK-EATER. n. f. [garlick and eat.] A mean fellow.

You've made good work,
You and your apron men, that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlick-eaters.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

GARMENT. n. f. [guarniment, old French.] Any thing by which the body is covered; cloaths;
dress.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Our leaf, once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers.

Raleigh's History.

Fairest thing that shines below,
Why in this robe dost thou appear?

Would'st thou a while more perfect show,
Thou must at all no garment wear.

Cowley.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,
And dy'd his garment with their scatter'd gore.

Waller.

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed.

Add. Spect.

Let him that fues for the coat, i. e. the shirt, or inner garment, take the cloak also, is a proverbial phrase too; for in the truth of the letter, a shirt is no likely matter of a law-suit, and signifies an uncontesting sufferance of such small losses.

Keblewell.

GARNER. n. f. [grenier, French.] A place in which threshed grain is stored up.

Earth's increase, and foyson plenty,
Barns and garners never empty.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

For sundry foes the rural realm furround;
The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground:

For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,
In winding mazes, works her hidden hole.

Dryden's Virgil.

To GARNER. v. a. [from the noun.] To store
as in garners.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life.

Shakespeare's Othello.

GARNET. n. f. [garnato, Italian; granatus, low Latin; from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the sapphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of blueish: its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby.

Hill.

The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients: the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple.

Woodward's Met. Fossils.

To GARNISH. v. a. [garnir, French.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appendages.
There were hills which garnish'd their proud heights with stately trees.

Sidney.

All within with flowers was garnish'd,
That, when mild Zephyrus amongst them blew, Did breathe out bounteous smells, and painted colours shew.

Spenser.

With taper light
To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnish'd with fruits, delighting both the eye and taste.

All the streets were garnish'd with the citizens, standing in their liveries.

2. To embellish a dish with something laid round it.

With what expence and art, how richly dress'd!
Garnish'd with 'sparagus, himself a feast!

No man lards salt pork with orange-peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitchook'd eel.

3. To fit with fetters; a cant term.

GARNISH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment.
So are you, sweet,
Ev'n in the lovely garnish of a boy.

Matter and figure they produce;
For garnish this, and that for use;
They seek to feed and please their guests.

2. Things strewd round a dish.

3. [In gaols.] Fetters. A cant term.

4. Penitencia carceraria; an acknowledgment in money when first a prisoner goes into a gaol.

GAR

GARNISHMENT. n. f. [from garnish.] Ornament; embellishment.

The church of Santa Giustina in Padua is a found piece of good art, where the materials being ordinary stone, without any garnishment of sculpture, ravish the beholders. Watson.

GARNITURE. n. f. [from garnish.] Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in garniture of their knees, that they are inferior in furniture of their heads. Government of the Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your fires an age ago, Is lost, without the garniture of show. Granville.

The seventh year we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase.
Lev. xxv. 20.

3. To pick up; to glean.
His opinions
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Gather'd from all the famous colleges.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Cast up the highway, gather out the stones.
Isaiah, lxii. 10.

I will spend this preface upon those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer.
Wotton.

To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees.
Locke.

4. To crop; to pluck.
What have I done?
To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No sooner gain'd, but slighted and betray'd;
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground! Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

5. To assemble.
They have gathered themselves together against me.
Job.

All the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row.
Bacon's New Atlantis.

If ere night the gathering clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear.
Dryden's Pastoral.

When gathering clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys! he cries.
Dryden.

When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, East and West, on airy courfers born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn.
Dryden.

Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it.
Addison's Cato.

2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.
Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came in to them.
Bacon's Henry VII.

3. To assemble.
There be three things that mine heart feareth;
The slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation.
Ecclesiast. xxvi. 5.

4. To generate pus or matter.
Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he like the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it.
Decay of Piety.

GA'THER. n. f. [from the verb.] Pucker; cloth drawn together in wrinkles.
Give laws for pantalons,
The length of breeches, and the gathers,
Part cannons, perriwigs and feathers. Hudibras.

GA'THERER. n. f. [from gather.]

Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gatherings when I come.
1 Cor. xvi. 2.

GA'TTEN-TREE. n. f. A species of Cornelian cherry.
GAUDE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain: Skinner imagines it may come from gaud, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks ayayay; and Mr. Lye finds gaud, in Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gawadho, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy; a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a showy bauble, and the person fooled. It also in Scotland denotes a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy. It is not now much used.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gauds, conceits, Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats. Shakespeare.

The fun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gauds,
To give me audience. Shakespeare's King Lear.

My love to Herminia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaud,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shakespeare.

Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gauds the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbants finest holland bear.
Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

To GAUDE. v. a. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.
Go to a gossip's feast, and gaud with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shakespeare.

GAUDERY. n. f. [from gaud.] Finery; ostentatious luxury of drefs.
The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was.
Bacon's Essays.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it.
South.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tarnish'd gaud'ry known.
Dryden.

GAUDILY. adv. [from gaudy.] Showily.
GAUDINESS. n. f. [from gaudy.] Showiness; tinsel appearance.
GAUDY. adj. [from gaud.] Showy; splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless
As the gay motes that people the fun-beams.
Milton.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hepp'd from side to side.
Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.

A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower.
Watts.

It is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity. Law.

GAUDY. n. f. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast; a festival; a day of plenty. A word used in the university.

He may surely be content with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Cheyne.

GAVE. The preterite of give.
Thou can'st not every day give me thy heart;
If thou can'st give it, then thou never gav'st it:
Lovers riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
It stay'st at home, and thou with losing sav'st it.
Donne.

GA'VEL. n. f. A provincial word for ground.
Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days.
Mortimer.

GA'VELKIND. n. f. [In law.] A custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death amongst all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force

Among other Welsh customs he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind.

Davies on Ireland.

To GAUGE. v. a. [gauger, jauge, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced, and often written, gauge.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.

2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vanes nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer, of taking measure or gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel.

Pope's Essays on Homer's Battles.

GAUGE. n. f. [from the verb.] A measure; a standard.

This plate must be a gauge to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by.

Moxon's Mech. Exer.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of your trade and wealth.

Locke.

Timothy proposed to his mistress, that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high; and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

GAUGER. n. f. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those earls and dukes have been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and escheator.

Carew on Cornwall.

GAUNT. adj. [As if gaunt, from gepanian, to lessen, Saxon.] Thin; slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!

Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old:

Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;

And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?

For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;

Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:

The pleasure that some fathers feed upon

Is my strict fast; I mean my children's looks:

And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt:

Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,

Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.

Shakespeare's Richard II.

Two maffiffs, gaunt and grim, her flight pursued,

And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embred.

Dryden's Fables.

G'AUNTLY. adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly; slenderly; meagerly.

G'AUNTLET. n. f. [gantlet, French.] An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the casque, or boxing glove.

A scaly gantlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Feel but the difference, soft and rough;
This is a gantlet, that a muffle.

Cloveland.

Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend;

The strong with iron gantlets arm'd shall stand,
Oppos'd in combat on the yellow sand.

Whomak'd, wrestled best, besmear'd with oil;
Or who with gantlets gave or took the foil.

The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light:

View his two gantlets; these declare
That both his hands were us'd to war.

So to repel the Vandals of the stage,
Our veteran bard resumes his tragick rage;

GAY. adj. [gay, French.]

1. Airy; cheerful; merry; frolick.

Smooth flow the waves, the zephyrs gently play;

Belinda smil'd, and all the world was gay.

Ev'n rival wits did Voiture's fate deplore,

And the gay mourn'd, who never mourn'd before.

Pope.

2. Fine; showy.

A virgin that loves to go gay.

Bar. vi. 9.

GAY. n. f. [from the adjective.] An ornament; an embellishment.

Morose and untractable spirits look upon precepts in emblem, as they do upon gays and pictures, the fooleries of so many old wives tales.

L'Estrange.

GA'NETY. n. f. [gayeté, French; from gay.]

1. Cheerfulness; airiness; merriment.

And from those gayeties our youth requires

To exercise their minds, our age retires.

Denham.

3. Finery; show.

Our gayety and our guilt are all besmirch'd,

With rainy marching in the painful field.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

GA'VLY. adv.

1. Merrily; cheerfully; airily.

2. Splendidly; pompously; with great show.

The ladies, gaily dress'd, the Mall adorn,

With curious dies, and paints the funny morn.

Like some fair flow'r, that early Spring supplies,

That gayly blooms, but ev'n in blooming dies.

Pope.

GA'YNESS. n. f. [from gay.] Gayety; finery.

Not much in use.

To GAZE. v. n. [gaze, or rather gezean, to see, Saxon.] To look intently and earnestly;

to look with eagerness.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem,

Inchad'd with all the honours of the world:

If so, gaze on.

From some she cast her modest eyes below;

At some her gazing glances roving flew.

Fairfax.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her.

Ecclus. ix. 5.

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind.

High stations tumults, but not bliss create;

None think the great unhappy, but the great;

Fools gaze and envy; Envy darts a sting,

Which makes a swan as wretched as a king.

Young.

To GAZE. v. a. To view steadfastly.

Straight toward heav'n my wond'ring eyes I turn'd,

And gaze'd a while the ample sky.

Milton.

GAZE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Intent; regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being lightened with her beauty's beam,

And thereby fill'd with happy influence,

And lifted up above the world's gaze,

To sing with angel's her immortal praise.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,

If any air of music touch their ears,

You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,

Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,

By the sweet power of music.

Shakespeare's Mer. of V.
